Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the natural environment research council for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual report of the natural environment research council has been submitted to me under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being laid before the House today.

The report highlights the council's achievements in a year in which public interest in environmental matters significantly increased. I was particularly interested to note:

(a) the start of the biological ocean flux study, a major programme involving scientists from both NERC and higher education institutions, contributing to international research on the carbon cycle in oceans;

(b) the collaborative research on the North sea, and progress in developing models to help predict water quality and the future effects of man's activities;

(c) the advances in research on the contribution of air pollutants to forest decline and the mechanisms involved;

(d) the development of a predictive system of biological monitoring and river quality, now incorporated in a software package and being developed further with support from the water industry;

(e) the start up of the NERC extractive industry partnership scheme.

I congratulate the council on these and its many other achievements and look forward to further progress in next year's report.

WALES

Unemployment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many travel-to-work areas in Wales had an unemployment rate (a) over 10 per cent., (b) between 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. and (c) below 5 per cent. in October.

Mr. Peter Walker: Of the 34 travel-to-work areas in Wales, two had an unemployment rate of more than 10 per cent. at October 1989, 24 a rate between 5 and 10 per cent. and 8 below 5 per cent.

Water

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he intends to account to Parliament for his responsibility under EC legislation to ensure that individual and private water supplies meet European standards.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be accountable through the usual parliamentary procedures.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many times the Secretary of State's committee has met since the passing of the Water Act 1989; and what matters have been discussed;

(2) if he will list the names of the individuals who comprise the Secretary of State's committee established under the Water Act 1989;

(3) what matters he has referred to the Secretary of State's committee for Wales since the passing of the Water Act; what advice has been offered to him; and what action he has taken as a result.

Mr. Grist: The committee has yet to be appointed.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list his responsibilities under EC and United Kingdom legislation in respect of water supply quality.

Mr. Grist: The main responsibilities of my right hon. Friend in relation to the quality and sufficiency of water supplies are set out clearly in the Water Act 1989. The EC directives relating to drinking water quality have now been incorporated into subordinate legislation arising from the Act.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) in what way local authorities in Wales will be involved in testing and monitoring water supplies from Dwr Cymru, other suppliers and private supplies following the full implementation of the Water Act 1989;

(2) what action he intends to take to bring private water supplies in Wales up to EC standards; and what grants are available to individuals and families who need work undertaken to achieve those standards;

(3) what mechanism he has established to test private water supplies in Wales and to monitor the results of such tests.

Mr. Grist: Section 56 of the Water Act 1989 continues and reinforces the general duty of local authorities to monitor the wholesomeness and sufficiency of all water supplies in their areas. In this respect, I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraphs 5-19 of Welsh Office circular 47/89, a copy of which is in the Library. Paragraph 12 of that circular also describes the important role of the drinking water inspectorate soon to be established under section 60 of the Act.

From 1 April 1990, schedule 9 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which amends section 604 of the Housing Act 1985, will come into force and this provides mandatory assistance for a property to have an adequate supply of wholesome water, subject to the grant applicant qualifying under the test of resources. On 29 November this year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that there is to be no limit on the amount which local authorities can spend on mandatory home renovation grants which can be used in this regard, next year.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of punishment and what directives can be called into effect in the event of a finding against the Government in the European Court following any prosecution for failing to meet directives on water quality.

Mr. Grist: The treaty establishing the European Economic Community does not convey to the Court of Justice express powers in terms of the enforcement of its judgments against member states but the United Kingdom would be under an obligation to comply.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest estimates available to him of the total level of receipts to Welsh eligible bodies in Wales from the European regional development fund in each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: Total European regional development fund payments to eligible Welsh bodies in each of the past five years are shown in the following table:

1984	28·6
1985	47·0
1986	43·1
1987	43·8
1988	83·0

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate available to him of the total level of commitments to eligible public bodies in Wales of grant aid from the European regional development fund in the current year and 1990.

Mr. Grist: The latest estimate for European regional development fund commitments to Wales for 1989 is £31 million. We expect that, following adoption of the Community support frameworks for objective 2 programmes, commitments will be made during the first three months of 1990 in respect of projects whose processing during 1989 has been delayed by the negotiation of the frameworks.

It will not be possible to provide a reliable estimate of commitments for 1990 until discussions with the European Commission on future funding are complete.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate available to him of the total level of commitments to eligible public bodies in Wales of grant aid from the European regional development fund in each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: Total European regional development fund commitments to eligible Welsh bodies in each of the past five years are shown in the following table:

1984	63·0
1985	54·9
1986	49·7
1987	57·8
1988	63·3

Natural Heritage

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional funding will be required for the purposes of merging the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission for Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This cannot be fully determined at this stage. However, appropriate provision will be included in the Estimates for 1990-91 to cover anticipated start-up costs for the new Countryside Council for Wales in that year, subject to parliamentary approval.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table in the same form as that contained in his reply of 15 November, Official Report, column 279, in each case distinguishing between manufacturing and non-manufacturing: and if he will provide corresponding figures for (i) the period 1970 to 1979 or the longest available comparable shorter period and (ii) females over each period.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table providing corresponding figures to those given in his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 279, for non-manual workers in all service industries (6-9) electricity (161) office machinery, etc. (33) retail distribution (64-65) railways (71) banking etc. (8) banking and bill discounting (814) business services (83) accountants, auditors and tax experts (836) social security (919) higher education (931) and school education (932) together with their weight in the earnings index in 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Comparable earnings figures for 1979 and 1989 are not readily available for the industries specified because of the change in the standard industrial classification in 1982 and it would involve disproportionate cost to compile the data on a consistent basis. The weights used in the average earnings index in 1979 are not available on a comparable industry basis: those available for 1989 are published on page 609 of the November 1989 issue of Employment Gazette.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table providing corresponding figures to that given in his written answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 279, for the manual workers in mechanical engineering (32) motor vehicles and their engines (351) textiles (43) footwear (451) clothing etc. (453) paper and paper products (471-472) internal combustion engines (3281) retail distribution (64-65) retail distribution of motor vehicles (651) business services (83) hospitals etc. (951) and personal services (13.1) together with their weights in the earnings index in 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Except for footwear (SIC 451), comparable earnings figures for 1979 and 1989 are not readily available for the industries specified because of the change in the standard industrial classification in 1982 and it would involve disproportionate cost to compile the data on a consistent basis. The weights used in the average earnings index in 1979 are not available on a comparable industry basis: those available for 1989 are published on page 609 of the November 1989 issue of Employment Gazette. The available information for footwear (SIC 451) is given in the table.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many professionally qualified accountants are employed by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 December 1989, four professionally qualified accountants were employed by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff, and of which grades are employed in the Health and Safety Executive's press department.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of staff, and their grades, employed in the Health and Safety Executive's press department as at 1 October 1989 is as follows:

1 Grade 7
3 Senior press officers (SIO grade)
2 Press officers (IO grade)
1 Executive officer
1 Administrative officer
1 Administrative assistant
1 Personal secretary

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, columns 19-20, how many actual training days have been organised, and on what dates, for factory inspectors, on each of these three sets of new regulations in 1989; and how many are planned for 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: Forty-three training days on the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations were organised for factory inspectors on the following dates in 1989: 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 20, 21, 24, 25, 26 and 27 April, 3, 4, 9 and 10 May, 3, 5 and 10 October. None are planned in 1990. Thirty-one training days on the Control of Noise at Work Regulations were organised for factory inspectors on the following dates in 1989: 8, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 29 and 30 November and 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15 December. One training day has been organised on 30 January 1990. No training days on the Electricity at Work Regulations were organised for factory inspectors in 1989. Training days for inspectors are planned for early 1990 but the dates have not yet been arranged.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the annual revenue budget of the Health and Safety Executive, excluding staff salaries, was spent on training of staff, in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The percentage of the Health and Safety Executive's annual revenue budget (that is, excluding capital expenditure) less expenditure on salaries, spent on training courses and related travel and subsistence costs over the last five years was as follows:

	Per cent.
1984-85	1·8
1985-86	2·5
1986-87	3·1
1987-88	3·5
1988-89	3·5

Workplace Child Care

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the level and standards of provision of workplace child care facilities in different member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no comparable data on the extent of workplace child care facilities for all member countries of the European Community.

Such information as my right hon. Friend has is contained in the European Commission April 1988 Consolidated Report "Childcare and Equality of Opportunity". This shows that most countries have some childcare services provided by employers and that services are most common in the public sector.

Workplace facilities are not always the most practical method of child care provision.

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether detailed recommendations on the future of the sheltered placement scheme will be made in his Department's internal review on employment assistance to disabled adults.

Mr. Eggar: The future of the services provided by my Department for supporting people with severe disabilities in employment are among the matters under consideration within the internal review.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to expand the sheltered placement scheme which provides job opportunities for severely disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We intend to inform sponsors as soon as possible about arrangements for the sheltered placement scheme in 1990-91.

Disabled People

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the demographic changes to the work force and the ability of disabled people to fill the associated skills gap in the work force.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Department makes regular projections of the size and age structure of the labour force. The latest figures, based on 1987 based population projections and preliminary results of the 1988 labour force survey, were published in the Employment Gazette, April 1989, and cover the period up to the year 2000. The annual labour force survey collects information on the qualifications of those with work-limiting health problems and disabilities. It is clear that people with disabilities suffer higher unemployment rates than able bodied people and are under utilised in the labour market. The shortage of young people in the 1990s means that employers will have to make better use of their workers and seek new sources of recruitment, including people with disabilities.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the need for anti-discrimination legislation to ensure equal employment opportunities for disabled people.

Mr. Nicholls: A consultative document covering the conclusions of the review will be published as soon as possible.

Successive Governments have judged that education and persuasion of employers is the most effective approach to improving employment opportunities for people with disabilities. The role of legislation is one of the matters being considered in the review of services to the disabled currently being undertaken by this Department.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help he has given to disabled persons to train them in the use of microtechnology.

Mr. Eggar: Many people are given the opportunity to acquire relevant skills and to train in the uses of microtechnology through all the Training Agency's programmes. People with disabilities play a full and growing part in those programmes.

In addition, people who because of their disability are helped by the use of microtechnology-based equipment supplied through the special aids to employment scheme to undertake training or employment are entitled to any necessary introductory training in the use of that equipment.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what programmes he has commissioned aimed at changing employers' attitudes towards the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: My Department encourages employers to adopt good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities mainly through marketing action by the 65 area teams of the Disablement Advisory Service; promotion of the code of good practice in the employment of disabled people and of a number of supporting publications and videos; and the fit for work award scheme.

In addition, disablement resettlement officers and other jobcentre staff help employers to obtain suitable employees with disabilities, and financial help is available to help overcome specific barriers at work. My Department is currently reviewing its services for people with disabilities, and a consultative document will be published shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits (Uprating)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the saving or cost of each measure announced in his uprating statement on 25 October, Official Report, columns 841-54, indicating where and to what extent the cost is due to uprating in line with the retail prices index, or Rossi index where appropriate, to September 1989.

Mr. Newton: As a result of all the increases in social security benefits I announced on 25 October, expenditure on my Department's programme will be some £2·8 billion higher in 1990-91 than if these were to be left unchanged. Increases in rates for contributory and non-contributory benefits generally were with reference to the September 1988 to September 1989 increase in the retail prices index (RPI) and for income-related benefits with reference to the increase in that index less housing costs (the Rossi index).

Changes going beyond what is statutorily or conventionally undertaken by reference to one of these indices were as follows:

	£ million
Additional increase in the higher rate of Invalidity Allowance	+ 1
Additional increase of 50p in the family premiums for income related benefits	+33
Additional increase of £1 in the Family Credit adult credit	+16
Additional increase in the Housing Benefit and Community Charge Benefit lone parent premium	+2
Additional increase in the allowance for personal expenses for Income Support claimants in hospital	+ 1
Additional increases in war widows age allowances	+ 3
Additional increase in the adult disability premiums in income-related benefits	+18
More than doubling of the disability premium for families with disabled children on income-related benefits	+ 8
Additional increase in the Therapeutic Earnings Limit	(less than £1 million see below)

In addition I made increases in certain payments and limits for which there is no statutory uprating requirement or established uprating convention:

	£ million
Increases in Income Support limits for residential care and nursing homes	+100
£15 increase in the Social Fund Maternity Payment	+ 3
£5 increase in the War Pensioner's disregard in income-related benefits	+ 4
Increase of £8 in the Invalid Care Allowance earnings limit	(less than £1 million see below).

I also announced various structural changes to help the less-well-off, over and above increases in the benefit rates. The costs of these in the first full year (1991-92) are as follows:

	£ million
New higher limit on the amount lone parents not on Income Support receiving Housing Benefit or Community Charge Benefit can earn without affecting benefit	+11
New higher Social Fund capital rule of £1,000 for elderly people on Income Support	+2
£10 Carer's premium in the income-related benefits	+15
Extension of Attendance Allowance to the terminally ill without a six month waiting period with consequent extension of Invalid Care Allowance	+28
Extension of Attendance Allowance for children under 2 years old with consequent extensions of Invalid Care Allowance	+6
Extension of Mobility Allowance to the deaf-blind	+5
Extension of Invalidity Benefit to those on Employment Rehabilitation Courses	[1]—
Additional funds for the Independent Living Fund (1990-91)	+19

[1] Estimated at a cost less than £1 million together with the additional increase in the invalid care allowance earnings limit and the therapeutic earnings limit mentioned above.

I also took account, in deciding on my proposals, of two major improvements which took effect in October in advance of the uprating but entailing substantially increased social security expenditure in 1990-91. These were:

	1989-90 £ million	1990-91 £ million
Abolition of the pensioners' earnings rule	+190	+375
Help for poorer pensioners who are disabled or over 75	+85	+199

I also announced increases in statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay. The lower rates will increase in real terms, as will the statutory sick pay standard rate threshold. There will be a lower increase in the statutory sick pay standard rate. Overall, these changes will increase expenditure by some £70 million to £80 million less than raising both rates and thresholds in line with the RPI. Had I decided to increase child benefit in line with the RPI, this would have cost some £250 million net of savings on other benefits.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families are currently unable to claim either family credit or income support due to the difficulty of deciding when a pattern of working over 24 hours a week is established; how long on average these families have been awaiting an outstanding claim for either income support or family credit; and how he proposes to ensure that the risk of failing to qualify for either family credit or income support, in such cases, be minimised.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Available information suggests that only a few hundred families are unable to qualify for either income support or family credit because the claimant or partner is working for 24 hours or more a week at the time of the claim, but cannot be regarded as normally engaged in such work for family credit purposes because it is casual or short-term. Claims from people in this situation have been dealt with, and decisions issued, as and when they have arisen. We propose to lay regulations shortly to amend the definition of normally engaged in the family credit legislation so as to enable more such families to qualify for benefit.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether for the purpose of calculating claimants' entitlement to family credit, depreciation is an allowable business expense of which account should be taken to determine the annual net profit of self-employed persons and their average weekly earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No. Paragraph 22(5)(b) of the Family Credit (General) Regulations provides that in calculating net profit for family credit purposes no deduction shall be made in respect of the depreciation of any capital asset.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest available figures for the number of families in receipt of family credit in Blyth Valley.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: At the latest available date, the number of families receiving family credit who at the time of their award were living in the area covered by the Blyth local social security office was 700.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has made a decision on the outstanding claim of Mr. and Mrs. Elliot of the Rodley boat centre to either family credit or income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 21 July 1989 at column 435 when my hon. Friend explained that decisions had been issued on Mr. and Mrs. Elliot's claims for both family credit and income support. I understand that they have made no further claim for either benefit. Mr. and Mrs. Elliot are, of course, free to claim either benefit again at any time if their circumstances are now such that they believe they may have become entitled.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of recipients of attendance allowance at (a) the higher rate and (b) the lower rate by sex and standard age cohorts at the last date for which figures are available.

[1] Numbers of recipients are those who actually receive some Invalidity Allowance (IVA). In addition there are 360,300 people who do not receive IVA because the rate of Additional Pension or guaranteed minimum pension they receive exceeds the rate of IVA which would have been payable.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of recipients of mobility allowance by sex and standard age cohorts at the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The latest available information, as at 30 September 1989, is in the table.

National Insurance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of national insurance contributions collected from employers is the responsibility of his Department; and how much that amounted to in the last available year broken down by each class of contributions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Inland Revenue is mainly responsible for the collection of class 1 national insurance contributions. The Department of Social Security assumes responsibility for collection in certain limited circumstances and collects such contributions direct in certain instances—for example in respect of Civil Service and Her Majesty's forces employments.

The Department also makes claims against insolvent employers. For the year ended April 1989 the Department collected about £1·5 billion in this way which represents about 5 per cent. of the total of class 1 national insurance contributions.

Social Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what collation of statistics his Department undertakes on how many claimants have been taken out of the priority categories eligible for community care grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Priority categories for community care grants have not been changed. Statistics relating to the number of refusals of community care grants on grounds of insufficient priority are in annex 9(1A) of the Secretary of State's annual report on the social fund 1988-89, a copy of which is in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each client group a table for rates of income support showing (i) the illustrative figures in the technical annex to the 1985 White Paper, (ii) the illustrative figures uprated by the retail prices index since then, (iii) the illustrative figures uprated by the Rossi index, (iv) the amounts provided to compensate for the 20 per cent. rates or poll tax contribution and (v) the proposed income support rates for April 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table:

Pensioners

Mr. Meacher To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out in detail the basis of his calculation, Official Report, 27 November, column 525, that pensioners' total incomes have increased by about 23 per cent. in real terms since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the article "Pensioners incomes and expenditure" which appeared in the Employment Gazette, of May 1987, a copy of which is in the Library. The same basis of calculation was used in arriving at the 1979-86 real terms increase of 23 per cent. in pensioners' average total net income.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what Government funds are available for the range of assessment, treatment, and support services provided by local authority social services departments, health authorities, and voluntary child care organisations, specified in her answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 339.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not available centrally. It is for local authorities and health authorities to determine the deployment of their overall resources to specific services in the light of legislative requirements, and local circumstances, needs and priorities. Government grants to voluntary organisations working in the field of child protection are usually paid as contributions to headquarters administration expenses.

SCOTLAND

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of employees at each nuclear power station in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland electricity board, British Nuclear Fuels and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority that, as at the end of November 1989, the number of employees at Scottish power stations was as follows:

	Number
Chapelcross	630
Dounreay	[1]1,838
Hunterston A and B	[2]1,046
Torness	[2]634

[1] The figure of 1,838 represents the total number of employees at the Dounreay Nuclear Establishment; of these, only around 15 per cent. work on the operation or in close support of the prototype fast reactor.

[2] The figures do not include Headquarters and Central Services personnel involved wholly or partly with nuclear generation.

Birds (Illegal Poisoning)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many birds, by species, were illegally killed by poisons in the Tayside region for each of the last two years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of birds, by species, reported to have been illegally killed by pesticides in Tayside region are as follows:

	Number
1987
Corvids	3
Gulls	2
Buzzard	1
1988
Corvids	20
Buzzards	2
Gulls	2
Eagle	1
1989 to date
Corvids	3
Buzzard	1

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, on how many occasions during each of the last five years he has drawn to the attention of the Islay estates owners the requirements of the law relating to the illegal poisoning of birds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The policy referred to in my answer of 4 December was introduced in 1988 following the golden eagle poisoning incidents on the Islay estate that year. The policy was also operated this year in the light of the poisoning incidents referred to in my previous answer. Prior to 1988, the attention of the Islay estates was not formally drawn to the incidents.

Parliament House

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost of the new lift being installed in Parliament house for the use of judges; and what is its purpose.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cost of installing the new lift will be approximately £100,000. It will allow more ready access from judges' chambers to court rooms.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met with the Argyll and Clyde health board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no recent meetings with Argyll and Clyde health board.

Lennox Castle Hospital

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients are resident in Lennox Castle hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Seven hundred and eighty-five.

Dr. John Myles

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what function is performed by Dr. John Myles in relation to the Scottish Development Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Dr. John Miles' function as ecological adviser is to assist the Scottish Development Department and other Scottish Departments to arrive at a better informed view of the effect of current and proposed policies affecting the living environment. One of his prime responsibilities is to interpret scientific information. He also advises on casework and assists in determining departmental ecological and environmental research requirements.

Health Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1980 the total number of doctors employed by the National Health Service and express this as a percentage of the 1980 figure.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the following table:

Year	Total	Percentage of 1980
1980	9,923	100·0
1981	10,167	102·5
1982	10,229	103·1
1983	10,410	104·9
1984	10,499	105·8
1985	10,509	105·9
1986	10,480	105·6
1987	10,476	105·6
1988	10,833	109·2

Natural Heritage Agency

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many permanent staff are likely to be employed by the proposed Natural Heritage Agency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposed agency will be adequately staffed to carry out its important responsibilities but it is too soon to estimate the number of permanent posts.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional funding will be required for the purposes of merging the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission for Scotland into a new agency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposed agency will have adequate resources to carry out its important responsibilities, but it is too soon to decide the precise level of funding which will be required.

Western Scottish Bus Company

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has received from Touche Ross and Co. concerning the financial management of the Western Scottish bus company; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Touche Ross and Co. has not been appointed to advise the Secretary of State or the Scottish transport group on matters concerning the management of the Scottish Bus Group subsidiaries or their privatisation.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has received from the Scottish Bus Group concerning recent management resignations from the Western Scottish bus company; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The management of Western Scottish Omnibuses Ltd. is a matter for the Scottish transport group and the company concerned. My right hon. and learned Friend is, however, aware that two second-level management staff have recently resigned from Western Scottish Omnibuses Ltd. Their reasons for doing so are a matter between the individuals concerned and the company.

Power Generation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce a non-fossil fuel obligation within the Scottish electricity generating industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: There are no plans to introduce a non-fossil fuel obligation in Scotland at present.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to encourage wind-generated power in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Government research and development into renewable energy sources is managed by the Department of Energy. Since 1979 the Government have spent over £140 million (over £190 million at 1989 prices) on research into renewable energy sources with the aim of identifying those technologies which can economically meet the energy needs of the next century. A 10 to 15-year programme is presently under way in conjunction with the electricity industry which, if successful, should provide the basis for the commercial exploitation of wind power from the late 1990s onward.

The Scottish Office has consistently stressed that Government support would be available for a viable Scottish development.

Parliament Hall

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of manufacture and erection of the two bronze plaques erected at the south end of Parliament Hall concerning the achievements of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply. The costs were:

Plaque to commemorate the roof restoration	540
Plaque to commemorate the window restoration	580

HEALTH

Cash Allocations (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cash allocation to Nottingham district health authority in constant prices for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Initial cash allocations to Nottingham HA at 1989-90 prices since 1982-83 are:

1982-83	162·7
1983-84	162·4
1984-85	157·6
1985-86	159·5
1986-87	167·7
1987-88	171·0
1988-89	174·7
1989-90	180·8

Figures before the 1982 NHS reorganisation would relate to Nottingham area health authority, a much larger organisation than the current district health authority, and would therefore not be comparable.

Demographic Changes

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the most recently available estimates of the percentage changes in demand on the hospital and community health services due to demographic change for each year from 1972-73 to 1995-96; and if he will put in the Library details of the methods used to arrive at these estimates.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There has been a conventional practice in recent years of giving estimates of increased demand on services from demographic change expressed in expenditure terms. I have never believed that these figures are very useful as they imply, wrongly in my opinion, that increased spending is the only way in which increased demand can be met. Nevertheless I give the information requested in the table.

Details of the method used to arrive at the estimates are given in answer to question 2 of the Social Services Select Committee report, Session 1988-89, HC 418.

NHS Reform

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific areas of expenditure on the family practitioner services are at present cash limited; which will be cash limited from April 1990; and which he plans to cash limit later.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At present expenditure on family practitioner services is not subject to a cash limit.

From April 1990, payments to general medical practitioners under the practice staff, cost rent and improvement grant schemes will be subject to a cash limit. From that date, general medical practitioners will for the first time be able to claim direct reimbursement for part of the costs of computer purchase, leasing and maintenance, and these payments will be subject to a cash limit.

A cash limit will apply at national level to total expenditure from GP practice funds which are, subject to parliamentary approval, to be introduced from 1 April 1991. No cash limits will apply to this expenditure at practice level. The management allowance to be paid in relation to the GP funding initiative will be subject to a cash limit.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will commission management studies of the strategic effectiveness of the new National Health Service management structures as they develop, including those where the regional health authority splits into separate businesses, the district health authority secures trust status and certain individual services become trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are supporting a considerable number of development projects designed to test out in districts, hospitals and other units different aspects of our proposed improvements to make sure that workable systems are in place by April 1991. Many of the proposals will evolve throughout the coming decade. We intend to achieve steady incremental progress, informed by the lessons of experience. I see no need to commission management studies at this stage.

Chiropractors

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about giving Government recognition to qualified chiropractors; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: During the past two months, we have received representations, as part of a campaign, from the British Association of Chiropractors, individual chiropractors and patients, calling for the state registration of chiropractors.

Practitioners of alternative or complementary therapies who are not registered with the General Medical Council and who are therefore not eligible to work within the NHS, are nevertheless at liberty to offer their services privately. It is for individual patients seeking the services of complementary practitioners, to satisfy themselves as to the competence of the practitioner concerned.

If members of a particular profession are concerned to ensure that professional standards are maintained and believe that statutory regulation is the best way of achieving this end, then it is for the profession itself to take all necessary steps necessary to obtain their goal.

Community Care

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Department will be responsible for furthering paediatric physiotherapy in schools, whether mainstream or special, under the programmes proposed in the White Paper on community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: District health authorities will remain responsible for the development of paediatric physiotherapy services for children in mainstream and special schools. We expect that health authorities will continue to collaborate with local education authorities to improve these services.

Whipps Cross Hospital

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ask the chairman of the North-East Thames regional health authority when he is likely to submit phase 2 of the Whipps Cross hospital development for approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. The timing of the submission of proposals for major capital developments to the Department of Health is for regional health authorities to decide.

Racial Abuse

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to counter the racial abuse of National Health Service staff by some patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Members of minority communities play an invaluable part in the NHS, for which many of us have cause to feel profoundly grateful. We totally deplore any racially motivated abuse of them.

Racial abuse or harassment is recognised as a form of violence in the report of the DHSS advisory committee on violence to staff which was chaired by my noble Friend Lord Skelmersdale. The report, which was published in July last year and a copy of which is in the Library, recommends that every unit should have a local strategy for dealing with violence, including preventive measures, suitable responses and support for staff who are victims. It also emphasises the critical importance of reporting systems and of encouraging staff to report all incidents.

We support this approach and hope that any member of staff who is subjected to or witnesses racial abuse will be encouraged to report it to his or her manager whose immediate responsibility it is to ensure that suitable action is taken.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the percentage of blood donors shown to have hepatitis C in random tests carried out by the national blood transfusion service;

(2) whether he proposes to introduce screening of blood donors for hepatitis C;

(3) whether supplies of stored blood plasma are checked for indications of hepatitis C.

Mr. Freeman: A screening test for antibodies to hepatitis C has been available only since the middle of the year, and no confirmatory test is at present available. In a preliminary study the national blood transfusion service examined frozen blood samples, but this work cannot be used to predict likely infection in fresh blood donations.

A systematic evaluation of the test on 15,000 donations at three transfusion centres is currently in progress. Results are not yet available. The introduction of the test for all blood donations is under review and will depend on the results of the evaluation and other scientific evidence supporting its benefit. Stored plasma is not tested for hepatitis C. It has not yet been shown that the test would reduce the possibility of transmission of disease in fractionated plasma products.

Cancer

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the rates of cancer of the breast and cervix in the north-east of England for those aged (a) 20 to 25 years, (b) 25 to 30 years, (c) 30 to 35 years, (d) 35 to 40 years, (e) 40 to 45 years, (f) 45 to 50 years, and (g) 50 to 55 years, and; what were the average rates for the rest of the United Kingdom for the same age groups, for each year from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The exact information requested could be provided only at a disproportionate cost. However, some information for the period 1980-84 is shown in the table.

Pharmacists

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are currently employed (a) in the Medicines Control Agency and (b) the drug tariff committee; and how many of these are qualified pharmacists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As at 1 November 1989 the Medicines Control Agency employed 297·5 staff (full-time equivalents); of these 52 are pharmacists*.

There is no drug tariff committee. About 35 staff in the Department have duties concerned with the preparation of the drug tariff. Of these, five are pharmacists*.

Note: * Members or Fellows of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain.

Midwives

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made to pay interest on backdated regrading awards to midwives subject to delay by the appeals procedures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The grading appeals are being dealt with under a longstanding agreement between the management and staff sides of the general Whitley council. It contains no provision for the payment of any interest should appellants be regraded on appeal.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to health authorities on the application of the grading criteria FII for midwives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The grading criteria for the new clinical grading structure were agreed by both staff and management sides of the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council. Departmental guidance issued in 1988 on the implementation of the structure applied equally to nurses and to midwives. Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has on the consistency of application of midwives' regrading criteria as between different health authorities;

(2) what representations he has received about the consistency between health authorities in midwives' regrading and from whom; and what response he proposes to make.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities are expected to adhere to the agreed clinical grading definitions and the management guidance issued by the health Departments in grading midwifery posts. These require posts to be graded in accordance with the particular duties and responsibilities they carry. Variations between authorities in the proportion of posts graded at particular levels will therefore arise, for example because of different approaches to service organisation.

We have received a number of representations on the grading of midwives. The Government have made clear their position in their response to the fourth report from the Social Services Committee Session 1988-89 "Resourcing The National Health Service: Midwives' Regrading 1988-89".

Clinical Grading Exercise

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the outcome of the review of the clinical grading exercise by the Manpower Services Commission (a) generally and (b) relating to midwives; and what action he has taken in response.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The clinical grading review for nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff was undertaken by the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council. It led to the introduction of a new grading structure for clinical posts, including midwifery posts, with effect from 1 April 1988. There was no review by the Manpower Services Commission.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons he has decided that some of the work of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship should remain confidential; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship is an independent advisory committee. It is for the committee to decide on the confidentiality of reports it has commissioned. The committee's reasons for doing so were set out in the answer given to my hon. Friend on 27 October 1989 at column 631. I accept that the committee must have the freedom to determine the confidentiality of its own proceedings and of the work it has commissioned if it is to function efficiently.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many breaches there have been of the voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry on advertising and sponsorship in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Before the formation of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship (COMATAS) in October 1986, there was no consistent record of breaches of the voluntary agreements. It was to remedy this position that COMATAS was set up. In it first annual report COMATAS recorded 41 breaches and in its second annual report, seven breaches of the voluntary agreement have been recorded and one further complaint was referred to the Advertising Standards Authority which judged it to be in breach of its code of practice.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many reports considered by the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorships have not been made available to Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship has commissioned and considered four reports on whether certain parts of the voluntary agreements are being observed. These are: a study of poster advertising near schools by Survey Research Associates Ltd; a study of sports sponsorship by the centre for mass communication research at the university of Leicester; and two surveys on advertising at confectioners, tobacconists and newsagents by MaS Research, Marketing and Consultancy Ltd. They have not been made available to Parliament for the reasons given in my reply to my hon. Friend on 27 October at column 631.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the terms of reference of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship to enable all the information made available to the committee to be made available to Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The tobacco industry has recently agreed to meet Ministers with a view to opening renegotiations of the voluntary agreement on advertising. The role of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship will be considered in this context.

Medical Records

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consideration he has given to the need to ensure confidentiality between patient and doctor, and to protect medical records stored on computerised systems from being sold to data processing companies;

(2) who owns, and has responsibility for, a patient's medical records stored on a computer system; and what rights a patient has to access to the information stored in these records;

(3) who owns, and has responsibilty for, a patient's medical records stored on index cards; and what rights a patient has to access to the information stored in these records;

(4) who owns, and has responsibility for, a patient's medical records stored on a smart card; and what rights a patient has to access to the information stored in these records.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are currently considering all these issues. We intend to issue a health circular on ownership, confidentiality and disclosure of personal health information in the NHS on which we propose to consult widely in the new year.

Census Information

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take steps to ensure that no information collected for the 1991 census, based on postal code areas, is used by insurance companies or building societies or others to withhold or weight policies based on that information;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that no information collected for the 1991 census is used to prepare mailing lists for any purpose.

Mr. Freeman: It would not be practicable for the Government to control the uses particular customers make of the aggregated data published from the Census. However, as with previous censuses, stringent measures will be taken to ensure confidentiality. No information on identified individual people or households will be passed to anyone other than employees of the registrars general. Furthermore, in order to guard against possible indirect disclosure of such information, no statistics, except, possibly, simple totals of people or households, will be published for areas containing very small numbers of households or people.

Statistical summary tables relating to fairly small local areas have been produced since the 1961 census. These have proved to be of great value to a wide range of users in central and local government and in health authorities, as well as to industry and commerce. The facility to define such areas directly in terms of groups of postcodes as well as census enumeration districts will add to the usefulness of these statistics, particularly to local and health authorities; and, subject to the overriding requirement to avoid disclosing data about individuals, I am anxious that the most effective use should be made of the data which everyone is required by law to provide to the census offices.

If census statistics were not made available for areas defined directly in postcode terms, it would still be possible for anyone to use maps and postcode directories published elsewhere in order to relate the statistics for any local area to the set of postcodes and to the set of addresses which fall within that area. Such uses could be prevented only by suppressing all census statistics for local areas. This would unnecessarily reduce the public availability of statistics collected by the census offices, and substantially diminish the value of the census.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has established that the eating of irradiated food by pregnant women is safe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: International expert bodies, such as the joint expert committee on food irradiation and the international consultative group on food irradiation, and the national expert body, the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods, have advised repeatedly on the safety and wholesomeness of irradiated foods. There is no evidence to suggest that irradiation of food up to an overall average dose of 10kgy presents a toxicological hazard or special nutritional or microbiological problems to the population at large or to specific groups of the population.

Irradiation is one among several techniques for preserving and improving the safety of certain foods. The Government consider that all members of the public in the United Kingdom should be free to choose to enjoy the preservation and safety benefits of irradiated food and are therefore seeking powers in the Food Safety Bill to ensure that this choice is available within an appropriate control framework.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of Army personnel and vehicles deployed in London for each shift on ambulance duties since 1 November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 51 Army vehicles were deployed in London with effect from 8 November. Each vehicle is crewed by two persons, making a total of 102 per shift.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each day since 1 October for the London area, per shift (a) the number of ambulance personnel on duty, (b) the number of vehicles available, and (c) the number of emergency calls and the number answered within seven minutes and 14 minutes;

(2) what are the total number of patients moved by (a) the London ambulance service, (b) St. John's and (c) military vehicles per day in London since 1 October;

(3) what is the average amount of money paid to a qualified ambulance person in London for September, October and November of the current year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The management of the London ambulance service is the responsibility of the South West Thames regional health authority to whom I refer the hon. Member.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings have been held by (a) himself and (b) Duncan Nichol, chief executive of the National Health Service with (i) the trade union side of the Whitley council for ambulance staff and (ii) the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel since 1 September.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel on 24 November when their claim for recognition was discussed. I met them on 14 November to discuss their role in the current dispute. Duncan Nichol, National Health Service chief executive, met the trade union side of the ambulance Whitley council on 22 September, 24 and 26 October and 17 November in attempts to find a basis on which negotiations in the Whitley council might be resumed; he also met the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel on 26 September and 17 November.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to assess the health implications of emissions from diesel-powered engines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health's independent expert advisory committee on the carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment is currently considering findings from a series of recent epidemiological and experimental studies relating to effects on health of diesel exhaust in order to assess any possible impact on public health.

Direct exposure to diesel exhaust fumes can cause irritation to the eyes and throat. Substances present in diesel fumes are known to be toxic to laboratory animals when they are exposed to high concentrations over a lifetime. However, human exposure to diesel fumes is normally transient and at much lower levels, and is not known to have any long-term effects on health.

Oral Tobacco Products

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has decided to proceed with the proposed ban on oral snuff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Letters have been sent today to the two companies affected to inform them that I have decided to make regulations under section 11 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which are being laid before Parliament today. The regulations will prohibit persons from supplying or from offering to supply, agreeing to supply, exposing for supply or possessing for supply any oral snuff. They will come into effect on 13 March 1990.

The purpose of the ban is to protect our population, particularly our young people, from the serious health risks posed by these products, the use of which is causally associated with an increased risk of oral cancer. There is increasing evidence from the United States of America and Sweden that these products can become popular amongst young people. The Government's action should nip this dangerous new habit in the bud.

When the Government originally proposed a ban on oral snuff last year, a three-month period was allowed for representations, and this period was subsequently extended by a month for the two companies involved. A large number of representations were received, the vast majority of which were in favour of a ban. The Government have considered all the representations with great care. It has also consulted its partners in the European community and other GATT signatories. However, no new evidence or arguments have come to light which suggest that the proposed ban is not justified.

The products which will be covered by the ban are goods which consist wholly or mainly of tobacco in fine cut, ground or particulate form or in any combination of those forms and which are for oral use other than smoking. This does not include traditional chewing tobacco, loose tobacco for making up into cigarettes, pipe tobacco or snuff for nasal use.

DEFENCE

Military Museums

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military museums, including regimental museums, are currently being maintained; and if he will list them with their locations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 99 military museums being maintained wholly or in part by the Ministry of Defence. This total includes regimental and corps museums, some of which are colocated or are in the process of moving to common premises, and those museums designated under the Heritage Act 1982. I will write to my hon. Friend with a list of these museums shortly.

Nuclear Defence Industry (Scotland)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the major employers in the nuclear defence industry in Scotland, their location and the number of employees at each;

(2) if he will list the number of employees in the nuclear defence industry and related industries in Scotland.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence does not hold detailed information in the form requested, but a rough estimate of employment in Scotland related to nuclear defence is some 9,000 including Rosyth dockyard, Coulport, Faslane and the Clyde.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of defence bases in Scotland, their location and the number of Scottish jobs at each base broken down into (a) armed forces and (b) MOD personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD's principal nuclear defence base in Scotland is the Clyde submarine base at Faslane. Other establishments providing support to the strategic deterrent programme are the royal navy armament depot at Coulport, Her Majesty's naval base at Rosyth and the naval reactor test establishment at Dounreay (HMS Vulcan). The figures for the number of personnel at present are as follows:

	Service	Civilian
Clyde submarine base	3,797	2,116
RNAD Coulport	65	1,775
HMNB Rosyth	698	[1]1,936
HMS Vulcan	6	420

[1] This figure does not include employees of the dockyard contractor.

Some MOD staff are also employed in support of United States nuclear-powered submarines based at Holy Loch.

Battle Tank (BAOR)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the cancellation of the programmes to develop a new battle tank for the British Army of the Rhine, and the Trigat anti-tank missile.

Mr. Alan Clark: We keep our investment in all weapon systems, including main battle tanks and anti-tank missiles, under constant review.

Toxic Chemicals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all toxic chemicals held at military bases and military production sites; what are the quantities of such chemicals; and under what environmental regulations they are managed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the type and quantity of toxic chemicals held at military bases and military production sites is not held centrally. The Department is bound by the general duties imposed by the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and by regulations made under it. Certain sites that produce noxious or offensive substances are registered with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in accordance with the Control of Industrial Air Pollution (Registration of Works) Regulations 1989. Although the MOD is not bound by the provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 or the Water Act 1989, it is a matter of general policy that it will aim to meet standards which are no lower than those in the community at large.

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, at the recent meeting of NATO Defence Ministers in Brussels, the issue of the forthcoming amendment conference for the 1963 partial test ban treaty, and its implications for the modernisation of nuclear warheads for new NATO controlled nuclear weapons, was addressed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend discussed a range of matters of mutual defence interest when he met his colleagues on the defence planning committee in Brussels in November, but it is not our practice to reveal the details of such discussions.

TRANSPORT

European Council

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the recent European Council of Transport Ministers meeting in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The meeting on 4 and 5 December, which was attended by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, saw important progress made towards the establishment of a single market in transport in two areas.

First, the Council agreed an interim experiment for road haulage cabotage as a preliminary step to a full-scale regime from 1993. Although this is a small step in itself, it represents a major breakthrough in terms of liberalising cabotage generally.

Secondly, the Council expressed its commitment to agree measures to liberalise air transport. From June 1993, airlines will be able to set their own fares subject only to "double disapproval"—that is, unless the countries at both the ends of the route reject the proposed fares. In the meantime, the present fare approval system will be made more flexible. Similarly, bilateral capacity sharing will be abolished from the end of 1992, and further relaxation will be made in the interim. The council also committed itself to ensure that uniform licensing criteria are introduced by June 1992 giving airlines established in a country the right to a licence. Altogether, this provided a clear basis for more detailed work over the coming months with a view to Council agreement under the Irish presidency. The Council adopted a directive on training for drivers of dangerous goods. The United Kingdom, supported by certain other member states, registered our concern in the minutes that future technical adaption should be consistent with the standards of the ADR.

There were discussions but not agreements on the Commission's proposals for shipping "positive measures", and on the current state of negotiations with west African countries on shipping; on vehicles hired without drivers; on road safety; on driving and working hours; and on transport infrastructure. After a debate on Community railway policy, the Commission was invited to set up a working party to look at a high-speed rail network and the scope for technical harmonisation. The Commission reported the current state of play in its negotiations with Switzerland, Austria and Yugoslavia on transit. Under other business, there were brief references to transit quotas, and to lorry taxation.

Life Saving at Sea

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many persons have been decorated with the bronze or silver medal for gallantry for saving life at sea in each year since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: There have been two awards of the sea gallantry medal (bronze) in the period: one in 1981 and the other in 1989. No sea gallantry medals (silver) were awarded.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken to alert master mariners, shipping companies, the lifeboat services, Her Majesty's Coastguard and other official institutions to the sea gallantry medal instituted by Act of Parliament to recognise acts of bravery at sea.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department has not thought it necessary to publicise the award in view of its long standing.

Traffic Noise

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made to the effect on householders of increasing traffic noise from existing roads; whether he has any plans to make such households eligible for the noise insulation grants available to residents affected by new road development, using the same noise level criteria; and whether he will evaluate the likely cost of such a measure.

Mr. Atkins: No general assessment has been made of the effect on householders of changes in traffic noise from existing roads. This is bound to vary substantially from case to case. In some cases, the building of new roads will reduce substantially the noise from existing ones.

The Land Compensation Act 1973 makes provision for noise insulation only in the case of new or substantially improved roads. It is not accordingly open to the Department under the law as it stands to make noise insulation available more widely. The cost of making insulation available in relation to all existing roads was estimated in 1983 at £1,840 million for some 2·3 million properties.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to introduce benzene vapour emission controls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The benzene content of petrol is already controlled by regulations and by European Community directive 85/210/EEC. Petrol may contain no more than 5 per cent. of benzene. In practice the average content in this country is about 3 per cent.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to discourage the transportation of toxic waste (a) inland and (b) for import-export.

Mr. Atkins: When toxic waste is transported, it is treated in the same way as other dangerous substances and must comply with the appropriate regulations to ensure safe transport. The import and export of toxic and other wastes is a matter for the Department of the Environment.

THE ARTS

Disabled Musicians

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the effect on disabled musicians of the recent closure of the music advisory service of the Disabled Living Foundation; and what funding his Department intends to offer towards providing such a service.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 12 December 1989]: I have asked for a report about the closure of this service and will write to my hon. Friend when I have received more information.

Wilding Report

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will extend the current closing date for responses to the Wilding report on "Supporting the Arts —A Review of the Structure of Arts Funding" to 31 January 1990.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 12 December 1989]: To avoid uncertainty in the arts world, I remain committed to announcing my response to Mr. Wilding's recommendations as soon as I am able. While, in reaching my decisions, I shall endeavour to take into account responses received after 31 December, I am reluctant to agree to a formal extension of the consultation period.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Companies Acts Investigations

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply of 27 November, Official Report, column 97, if he will give his reasons for believing it unnecessary to conduct a review of the possibilities of prejudice to a criminal trial of individuals named in a Companies Act investigation when those individuals are, in advance of their trial, publicly disciplined by a self-regulatory organisation established under the Financial Services Act.

The Attorney-General: Self-regulating organisations recognised under the Financial Services Act are responsible for exercising their own discipline over those who have agreed to be bound by their rules, so as to ensure that their members are fit and proper to conduct investment business. Such organisations are also subject to the general duty at common law to refrain from acts which raise a real likelihood of interference with the administration of justice. I am satisfied that these obligations are well known and understood by those affected and have no reason to doubt that care is taken to strike the right balance according to the circumstances of particular cases.

PRIME MINISTER

Constitution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister would be responsible for putting proposals to Parliament on a constitutional separation of powers.

The Prime Minister: This would depend on the nature of the proposals.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veterinary Medicines

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Truro of 5 December, which veterinary medicines were discussed with Monsanto on 15 November.

Mr. Maclean: The discussions concentrated on general licensing principles, although Monsanto's BST product was mentioned.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when representatives from (a) Eli Lilley and (b) Monsanto last met members of the Veterinary Products Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Veterinary Products Committee met representatives from Eli Lilley on 19 April 1989, and from Monsanto on 20 September 1989, in both cases to review evidence submitted in support of a product licence application.

Poultry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of premises in each county of England requiring inspection under the provisions of the testing of poultry flocks orders.

Mr. Maclean: It is estimated that the number of flocks subject to the requirements of the Poultry Laying Flocks (Testing and Registration etc.) Order 1989 in England is in the region of 28,000. The order does not contain specific inspection requirements, but I expect inspections to be concentrated particularly on the larger flocks, estimated at around 4,000, which will be required to be registered with my Department. Under the Poultry Breeding Flocks and Hatcheries (Registration and Testing) Order 1989 an estimated 3,000 breeding flocks and 120 hatcheries in England will be visited by my officials. A breakdown of these figures by counties is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimate of the additional costs being borne by the local authorities in their enforcement of the order relating to the registration and testing of poultry flocks.

Mr. Maclean: I do not have information on the resources which local authorities are allocating to work in connection with the two new orders on registration and testing of poultry flocks, which came into force on 26 October 1989.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific or veterinary studies have been carried out on the Government's slaughter policy for laying poultry; and whether any of these studies has produced evidence in favour of the policy.

Mr. Maclean: The evidence relating to salmonella infection in poultry flocks and eggs was reviewed by the House of Commons Agriculture Committee in its report of 28 February 1989. The Committee concluded that in seeking to address the problem of the rise in salmonella food poisoning cases the Government were right to make egg production the first focus of attention. In reaching this conclusion the Committee referred to the routes by which eggs may become infected via infected flocks, through faecal contamination and transovarian transmission, and welcomed the Government's announcement of the compulsory slaughter policy for poultry flocks. It is too early to reach definite conclusions about the effectiveness of this policy, but it is clear that the removal of infected flocks is helping to reduce the risk of salmonella infection in humans.

Enzymes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has authorised the use of any products containing enzymes from blood for the purpose of creating restructured fresh meat products; if he has received any requests for approval for trials of such products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No. No such requests have been received. The use of enzymes in food is subject to the general provisions of the Food Act. It is an offence to add any substance to food intended for sale so as to render the food injurious to health.

Cetaceans

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the use of echo locators and side scanners and their effect on dolphin and porpoise behaviour.

Mr. Gummer: Echo locators and side scanners are standard equipment on modern fishing vessels to assist in the location of fish shoals for capture. I am not aware of any evidence to suggest that such equipment has any adverse effect on dolphin or porpoise behaviour.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the consequences of the use of nylon monofilament fish nets for the dolphin and porpoise population in British coastal waters.

Mr. Gummer: I am aware of the concern that monofilament fishing nets may accidentally ensnare dolphins and porpoises. However there has been no evidence that this is a significant problem in our waters. Nevertheless the fisheries Departments are planning a general monitoring scheme on the incidental capture of cetaceans in United Kingdom fisheries, so that we can keep the matter under closer review.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce measures similar to those in the United States Marine Mammal Protection Act to protect the populations of cetaceans.

Mr. Gummer: I understand that the specific problem which the United States authorities have sought to address this year, under their Marine Mammal Protection Act, is the very large number of small cetaceans which may be caught in the Pacific purse-seine fisheries for yellow-fin tuna. There is no comparable situation within United Kingdom waters and therefore we have no plans to introduce similar measures. Our own legislation already seeks to protect cetaceans by prohibiting their deliberate taking within our 200-mile limit and the import or sale of cetacean products in the United Kingdom.

Global Warming

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies are (a) being conducted and (b) planned by his Department into the likely effects of the greenhouse global warming effect on farming and agriculture in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend, the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 4 December at column 112.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, during the meeting of the Council of European Agriculture Ministers in Brussels on 21 November, he put forward any policies aimed at modification of agricultural practices to mitigate the greenhouse effect, that is global warming.

Mr. Gummer: There was no discussion of the greenhouse effect at this meeting of the Council.

Beef Premium

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to obtain agreement with the United Kingdom's European partners for the extension of the £27 beef premium to include heifers and to apply to herds in excess of 90 head.

Mr. Gummer: I see no prospect of being able to negotiate the inclusion of heifers in the beef special premium scheme. The United Kingdom voted against the imposition of a headage limit and I continue to regard it as discriminatory.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision he makes for the inspection of live animal exports to ensure the provisions of the Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973 and the Protection of Animals Act 1911 are met.

Mr. Maclean: Veterinary inspections and supervised loadings of every consignment of farm animals exported for further fattening or slaughter are made in accordance with the Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981. Under this order the state veterinary service (SVS) also oversees transport arrangements for breeding farm livestock where advice and guidance may be necessary. Enforcement of the 1973 order is primarily a matter for local authorities, but the SVS provides assistance and advice where necessary.

Salmonella

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has refused to grant licences for independent scientific tests under proper veterinary supervision to be carried out on flocks found to be infected with salmonella typhimurium and enteritidis.

Mr. Maclean: A licence may be given for samples to be taken for separate examination if this is requested by the flock owner. Decisions to require the slaughter of infected flocks are however based on the results of laboratory examinations carried out by my Department.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether broiler flocks affected by salmonella typhimurium and enteritidis can complete their growing cycle and be processed in the normal way to end up as raw meat in kitchens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There is no requirement for broiler birds to be tested for salmonella. Broiler breeder flocks are however required to be tested and, if found to be infected with salmonella enteritidis or salmonella typhimurium, will be slaughtered in order to minimise the risk of infection spreading through the production chain. Advice to consumers has been given on the precautions which should be taken in handling and cooking poultry meat.

Animal Exports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what administrative level the numbers of animals exported for research purposes are collected.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise keep records of exports of live animals, but these do not distinguish between those sent for research purposes and other uses.

Egg Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many eggs were imported into the United Kingdom during the month of November; of these how many were (a) tested for salmonella, (b) condemned for salmonella contamination or (c) condemned for other reasons.

Mr. Gummer: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as these data become available.

Zoonoses Order 1988

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, what directions he has given for the disposal of carcases of birds slaughtered under the Zoonoses Order 1988.

Mr. Maclean: The methods of disposing of carcases from compulsory slaughtered flocks include burial and incineration, the method used in each case depending on local circumstances.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what elements of the veterinary products committee examination of bovine somatotropin have not yet been completed.

Mr. Maclean: The veterinary products committee has yet to submit its recommendations on any of the BST products for which licence applications have been made. I understand that in accordance with the Medicines Act the committee is still reviewing a range of matters with the help of data being generated in field trials.

Our Lady of Passion Monastery, Daventry

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much compensation has been paid to Our Lady of Passion monastery at Daventry; and if he will estimate the costs incurred by the monastery arising from the slaughter of 5,000 birds.

Mr. Maclean: Details of the amount of compensation paid for slaughtered poultry, in accordance with the provisions of the Animal Health Act 1981, are a matter between the flock owner and my Department. I am not in a position to estimate the costs incurred by Our Lady of Passion monastery.

Liriomyza Huidobrensis

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will ban the importation of plants from Holland in order to control the spread of Liriomyza huidobrensis among plants;

(2) what compensation is proposed for those growers compelled to destroy crops infested with Liriomyza huidobrensis;

(3) what has been the incidence of Liriomyza huidobrensis infestation in plants over the last 10 years; and what steps he is taking to counter the problem.

Mr. Maclean: So far this year there have been 27 confirmed findings of the South American leafminer, Liriomyza huidobrensis. There were no findings in previous years. The Ministry is maintaining a policy of eradication of this pest to ensure that it does not become established in this country. As regards compensation and controls on the importation of plants from the Netherlands. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 6 December at column 248.

Microwave Ovens.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has sponsored within the last 12 months to assess the safety of microwaves in respect of food cooked therein; what research is either in progress or planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The research to assess the safety of food cooked in domestic microwave ovens commissioned within the last 12 months is as follows:

Title	Contractor	Status
1. The performance of Microwave Ovens for Cooking and Reheating Foods.	Mr. M. Duncan	Completed
2. Microwave Reheating of Ready Meals	IFR-Bristol	Completed
3. Destruction of Listeria monocytogenes during Microwave Cooking.	IFR-Norwich	Completed
4. Effect of Microwave Cooking on Survival of Listeria monocytogenes in Cook-Chill Retail Products.	CFDRA	Completed
5. Testing the Uniformity and Reproducibility of Reheating in Domestic Microwave Oven.	IFR-Bristol	Completed
6. The Influence of the Physical, and Electrical Properties on the Quality of Foods Heated by Microwaves.	CFDRA	On-going

The position is still being evaluated and further research will be commissioned as necessary.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to eliminate the use of microwaves designed for domestic use in commercial premises.

Mr. Maclean: My officials are holding urgent discussions with the Institution of Environmental Health Officers to establish how far this practice creates a problem, and with a view to taking whatever steps may be necessary to make sure that caterers have the right equipment to avoid any risk to food safety.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has become of the microwave ovens donated by manufacturers to facilitate the study recently completed by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: The microwave ovens do not belong to my Department as they were made available to the researchers by the manufacturers. Their fate is a matter for discussion between the manufacturers and the researchers at Bristol.

Bananas

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the annual tonnage of bananas imported into the United Kingdom as a percentage of the European Community total in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The annual tonnage of bananas imported into the United Kingdom as a percentage of the European Community total in each of the last five years is as follows:

United Kingdom imports of bananas as a percentage of total European Community imports per cent.

[1]1984	16·7
[1]1985	16·5
1986	13·2
1987	14·0
1988	13·5

[1] Excluding Spain and Portugal.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total tonnage of imports of bananas in each of the last five years from (a) Africa, Caribbean and Pacific suppliers, (b) Latin America and (c) other suppliers.

Mr. Maclean: The total tonnage of imports of bananas into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years from (a) African, Caribbean and Pacific signatories to the Lomé convention, (b) dollar area countries (incorporating Latin American sources) and (c) other suppliers are as follows:

	1984 tonnes	1985 tonnes	1986 tonnes	1987 tonnes	1988 tonnes
African, Caribbean and Pacific	184,463	222,678	275,836	271,620	322,327
Dollar area (including Latin American countries)	120,854	99,363	59,541	80,604	61,654
Other suppliers	4,010	1,506	7,619	7,193	4,016
TOTAL	309,327	323,547	342,996	359,417	387,997

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria the banana trade advisory committee take into account in its monthly meetings to assess the supply and demand position on imported bananas.

Mr. Maclean: In assessing the supply position the banana trade advisory committee considers estimates of future sendings from all ACP and EC origins given either by the traditional supplying countries or by the main importing companies. The committee also keeps in mind the minimum figure for imports of bananas from the dollar area guaranteed to the smaller banana importers. On demand, estimates are based on advice from all sectors of the trade and take account of the Government's own rising minimum supply requirement figures which are published for the year ahead.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with European Community Ministers concerning banana import policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: None. But my officials have been in contact with their counterparts in other European Community countries and the European Commission. We wish to ensure that policy from 1993 onwards on bananas takes account of consumer interests and of the competition and efficiency objectives of the single market, and is consistent with our commitments to our Caribbean suppliers.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on banana import policy in the last 12 months; and what reply he gave.

Mr. Maclean: We have received representations from a wide variety of interests in the past 12 months, including from United Kingdom trade, ripener and retailer interests and from our supplying countries. Our responses have reflected the balance of interests that is struck in our banana policy—the fulfilment of commitments to our traditional suppliers, the improvement of competition in the market and the improvement of banana quality.

Food Safety

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the present membership of his food advisory committee and the committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food, consumers products and the environment and whether there have been any changes in either committee during the last 12 months.

Mr. Maclean: The Members of the food advisory committee (FAC) are as follows:

These changes strengthen the consumer background of the FAC. Changes in membership of the FAC are always announced by press release.

The membership of the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Eggs

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will estimate the number of small egg producers which have gone out of business since the introduction of the Zoonoses Order 1989;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of egg producers which have gone out of business since 1 January.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to allow United Kingdom egg producers to compete fairly with other European Community egg producers since the introduction of the Zoonoses Order of 1989.

Mr. Maclean: The European Commission are drafting proposed measures on salmonella in poultry including the establishment of effective controls at the points of production, to apply throughout the Community.

At present whilst imported eggs take a very small part of the market our exports have increased so far this year by over 90 per cent. compared with 1988. We are also developing an initiative to label British produced eggs as "British" to encourage consumers' confidence in British eggs.

Food Premises

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on how many food premises come under the jurisdiction of the Duchy of Cornwall.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that no food premises are managed directly by the Duchy of Cornwall. Certain of the Duchy's tenants are known to run food businesses, but details are not available centrally.

Microwaved Food

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the molecular structures of (a) milk products, (b) meat and (c) fish which has been microwaved;

(2) if he will make a statement on the presence of the amino acids D-proline and cis-hydroxyproline in food which has been microwaved.

Mr. Maclean: Microwaving is simply one method of heating food. I am not aware of any good evidence that changes in food brought about by microwave heating would not also be brought about by other methods producing equivalent amounts of heat.

I understand that the account of the research carried out at the University of Vienna and reported in The Lancet of 9 December was very incomplete. It failed to mention that a very small milk sample was microwaved at full power in a sealed tube to an unknown temperature (probably well in excess of 100 deg C) until it was brown. This heat treatment was far more severe than that received by other samples with which it was compared and bears no relation whatever to the way consumers would heat milk in the kitchen.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Lee: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Brussels Agriculture Council held on 11 and 12 December.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting together with my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), the Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

The Council discussed a possible Community initiative on agriculture in the current GATT round. I emphasised the need for a constructive Community position, which would further the process of agricultural reform and the negotiations. Further discussions will now be held in the Foreign Affairs Council.

The Council reached agreement in principle on a directive laying down arrangements for veterinary checks on certain animal products. This contains satisfactory safeguards so that the dismantling of controls at the border does not significantly increase the risk of the spread of disease. Special safeguards are included, benefiting countries, such as the United Kingdom, that do not vaccinate against food and mouth disease or are free from swine fever. The directive will be implemented at a date which will be decided by the Council taking account of arrangements to be put in place establishing a uniform Community system governing imports from third countries.

Agreement in principle was also reached on a Council regulation specifying the level of checks member states must undertake on firms benefiting from payments under the guarantee section of the Community's farm fund. This should help to combat fraud.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Environmentally Friendly Technology

124. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the value of the global market in environmentally friendly technology; and what steps he is taking to urge British companies to take a major share of this market.

Mr. Forth: Environmentally friendly technology is a portmanteau term which can be applied to an enormous selection of goods and services, from biodegradable washing powder to the fitting of flue gas desulphurisation processes to power stations. It is, therefore, impossible to state a single figure for the global market. However, the current estimate of the world market for pollution control products and services is £100 billion a year.

The Department of Trade and Industry has set up the business and the environment unit (BEU) to focus on specific key areas of the DTI environmental programme, such as waste management, clean technology and pollution control. The BEU helps United Kingdom companies to exploit the market opportunities for clean technology, pollution control equipment and services, and for other environmentally-friendly products. It gathers and maintains information on standards and world markets, assists United Kingdom companies to take advantage of the various support schemes available in this field and encourages United Kingdom companies to participate in environmental technology exhibitions at home and abroad.

British Aerospace (Rover Deal)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the correspondence between British Aerospace and the Government over the future of the golden share.

Mr. Ridley: Correspondence between British Aerospace and the Government over the future of the golden share from 1985 (when British Aerospace made its initial request to raise the foreign shareholding limit), to August 1989 when I decided to raise the BAe and Rolls-Royce limits following agreement with the European Commission, took place on the basis of commercial confidentiality. At the time of the Rover Group sale my right hon. and noble Friend, the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, made it clear, as can be seen from his letter of 12 July which I have sent to the hon. Member, that he was sympathetic to BAe's case for a relaxation of the limit. The detailed proposals for raising the limit, common to both companies, had to be decided in consultation with the Commission which had since 1987 queried compatibility at the 15 per cent. foreign shareholding with EC law.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what he now estimates to be the value of the tax concessions made to British Aerospace during the Rover negotiations.

Mr. Ridley: No tax concessions were made to British Aerospace during the Rover negotiations. On the contrary, contractual arrangements were put in place effectively to deny Rover Group the benefit of tax losses in excess of £500 million which the group was entitled to carry forward under United Kingdom tax law. In that connection, the position remains subject to any applicability of section 768 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988, on which British Aerospace may seek a view from the Inland Revenue in accordance with the terms of the correspondence between British Aerospace's advisers and the Inland Revenue which has been made available to the Public Accounts Committee.

As explained at the time of the final deal, certain contractual ring-fencing arrangements agreed in the March conditional terms were lifted so that the final contractual position with regard to disclaimed capital allowances and capital losses was no more, and no less, restrictive than under normal revenue law.

Blood Products

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the quantity and value of imported blood products, distinguishing between factor 8 and other blood products, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The information held centrally relates only to the usage of imported factor 8 concentrate and is given in the table. Information on the value of these imports is not held centrally.

Export Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number, nature and size of charges made for services under the export initiative (a) in March 1989, and (b) in October 1989.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is as follows:

DTI Export Services

Service	Number of Charges		Nature of Charge		Size of Charge (income generated)
	March 1989	October 1989	March 1989	October 1989	March 1989 £k	October 1989 £k
Export Representative Service	33	11	£517·50, £345·00, £172·50 depending on market	As for March	12·6	1·91
Overseas status review service	21	17	£24·15	As for MIEs below	5·17	1·61
Market Information Enquiries [MIEs]	No Charge	108	No Charge	Up to 4 hours work at Posts overseas = £57·50 over 4 hours = £115	No Charge	9·00
New Products Service	No Charge	1	No Charge	£57·50 per story	No Charge	0·06
Export Intelligence Service	69,000	n/a	£0·50p per notice	n/a	34·5	n/a
Overseas Trade Fairs	424	634	See below	See below	548·00	992·00

It is difficult to compare the figures provided, as a new accounting system based on the use of the DTI service card for paying for most export services was introduced on 1 April 1989. The following should also be noted:

Overseas trade fairs: for fairs opening prior to 1 April 1990, the charge is 40 per cent. of the DTI's direct costs of providing space and exhibition stand for first time participants at an event, 55 per cent. for second timers and 75 per cent. for regular exhibitors. For events opening after 1 April 1990 the charge is 50 per cent. for the first three participations in a particular country (five for Japan) and full cost thereafter. Some of the receipts in October will be under the former regime and some under the latter.

Export Intelligence Service: elements of the export intelligence service have been contracted out to Export Opportunities Ltd. The information for October 1989 is commercially confidential.

Chargecard for Exporters

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the contract awarded to Welbeck Financial Services Ltd. to operate the Department of Trade and Industry chargecard for exporters was subject to competitive tender; and how tenders were obtained.

Mr. Redwood: Yes. Five companies were invited to tender to operate the DTI service card.

Ferranti

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he will launch an investigation into the affair of Ferranti's acquisition of ISC;

(2) if he will order an inquiry into alleged fraud involving the Ferranti Company.

Mr. Redwood; I have no plans to do so.

The serious fraud office and the company fraud department of the metropolitan police are actively investigating allegations of fraud prior to, surrounding and subsequent to the merger of Ferranti plc and International Signal and Control Group plc.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the auditing firms criticised by his Department's inspectors since June 1979 but which have nevertheless been allowed to make accounting policy through their membership of the Accounting Standards Committee or its working parties; and how such firms have come to be represented on the committee.

Mr. Redwood: Those voting members of the Accounting Standards Committee (ASC) who are accountants are nominated on a personal basis by their professional body and appointed by the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies, which has stipulated that they shall not regard themselves as delegates of sectional interests but shall be guided by the need to act in the general interests of the community and of the accountancy profession as a whole. Members of its working parties are appointed by the ASC itself.

Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, at any time since June 1979, any person has acted as an inspector for any of the Department of Trade and Industry's investigations whilst that same person was under investigation by other inspectors.

Mr. Redwood: Inspectors are appointed to investigate the affairs or membership of companies, not individuals. In one case an accountant was appointed to be an inspector during the course of another investigation which involved his firm as auditors of the company under inquiry, and in which he was subsequently criticised. These appointments were made in 1975 and 1977 respectively.

Milbury plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government have taken against auditors Arthur Young following the criticism of them in his Department's report on Milbury plc.

Mr. Redwood: A copy of the inspectors' report was sent to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. It subsequently announced that a committee of inquiry had been set up under the joint disciplinary scheme to look into certain matters arising out of the report.

Bananas

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in the last 12 months concerning the operation of the scheme of banana import quotas; and what reply he gave.

Mr. Redwood: During the last 12 months a few representations have been received from importers about the allocation of the dollar banana quota. We have explained that this is shared out amongst existing traders on the basis of past trade in dollar bananas. Newcomers are required to demonstrate their commitment before receiving an allocation. "Past trade" is the method used to distribute all other import administered quotas.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his response to the proposals in the European Economic Community consultative document on the import of footwear from Korea and Taiwan.

Mr. Redwood: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade is giving urgent consideration to the Commission's consultative document in the light of their findings and the views expressed by the United Kingdom industry and others. He expects to reach a decision on the appropriate action to be taken very shortly.

Single European Market

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many seminars on the subject of the single European market have been organised by his Department during the last two years, broken down by region.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 December 1989]: My Department has organised 20 regional breakfast presentations and provided ministerial and official speakers for 1,423 conferences and seminars in the United Kingdom, primarily organised by private sector bodies, since the Europe "Open for Business" campaign was launched in March 1988.

The regional breakdown of these figures is as follows:

East Midlands	1	159
North East	1	85
North West	3	155
South East	5	620
South West	2	121
West Midlands	1	150
Yorkshire and Humberside	2	115
Northern Ireland	1	5
Scotland	2	7
Wales	2	6

The figures for conferences and seminars exclude speakers provided by the relevant Government Departments in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

My Department also organised a major conference on Europe "Open for Professions", held in London on 4 October this year.

Batteries (Recycling)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made towards the recycling of batteries; and if he will make a statement about the role of the Warren Spring laboratory.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1989]: Battery recycling is well-established in the United Kingdom, but is mostly concentrated upon the larger land-acid and nickel-cadmium cells, and upon silver oxide and mercuric oxide button cells. Commercial recycling of the consumer types of alkaline manganese and nickel-cadmium batteries has not so far proved economically viable. Warren Spring laboratory, as part of a collaborative project, is carrying out research into methods of recovering these batteries from the domestic waste stream and the environmental, economic and technical issues which recovery involves.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken in response to proposals relating to the Inland Revenue from British Aerospace referred to in a letter which was sent by Professor Roland Smith to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry between 6 July and 12 July 1988.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 December 1989]: It was agreed that British Aerospace could seek a view in advance from the Inland Revenue about the applicability of section 768 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 to proposals to be made by British Aerospace following its acquisition of Rover Group.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Health Officers

7. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any new proposals for increasing the number of environmental health officers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The number of environmental health officers needed to discharge statutory functions is a matter for each individual local environmental health authority to determine in the light of local circumstances.

Wild Life

14. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals the Government have to protect wildlife.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 introduced for the first time in Great Britain comprehensive statutory protection for endangered wild species and their habitats. Protection is given to many species of wild animals and plants and to all birds; the lists of animals and plants are reviewed every five years.

Planning

17. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to issue any further planning policy guidance notes or introduce any legislation on planning matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My hon. Friend will know that the Gracious Speech contained no proposal for planning legislation in this Session. We do propose, however, to issue several new or revised planning policy guidance notes in the coming months.

123. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider seeking to amend legislation on planning procedures to include permission to demolish dwelling houses in the scope of planning applications.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has considered this carefully, but he does not believe that there is a need to extend planning controls over demolition.

76. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding planning procedure.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend receives a number of representations about planning procedure. In particular, over 400 individuals and organisations have responded to a consultation paper entitled "Efficient Planning" which we issued on 28 July.

Historic Buildings

18. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the planned expenditure of his Department on the royal parks, the royal palaces and other historic buildings in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Trippier: The gross planned expenditure figures are £165·9 million for 1990-91 and £169·7 million for 1991-92. They include the re-use of income such as trading and visitor receipts for the occupied palaces, parks and the new Historic Royal Palaces Agency, and include grant-in-aid to English Heritage. This expenditure will permit improvements in the standards of presentation and preservation of our heritage and increase the enjoyment of visitors, and represents a significant increase over the current year.

Evironmental Protection

19. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on environmental protection.

Mr. Trippier: Very many, particularly in relation to the proposals which we wish to include in this session's Environmental Protection Bill.

Nature Conservancy Council

20. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council; and what was discussed.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy. (Dr. Thomas).

27. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the reorganisation of the Nature Conservancy Council; and if he will make a statement.

46. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the Government's plans for the future of the Nature Conservancy Council.

62. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations from Welsh hon. Members he has received on the decision to set up separate bodies to deal with nature conservancy issues in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr Trippier: My Department has received a large number of representations about the reorganisation of the NCC covering a wide spectrum of views. Common to almost all the representations has, however, been the need to maintain a sound science base and for appropriate arrangements for addressing nature conservation issues with a Great Britain or international dimension. All representations received were taken into account in the formulation of the Government's proposals for a statutory joint committee, announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 23 November.

Rent Arrears

21. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what amount local authority rent arrears rose in 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: Local authority figures for 1988-89 are not yet available. However, in 1987-88, local authority rent arrears amounted to £226 million or 5·7 per cent. of the total rent roll. This constituted a 15 per cent. increase over the arrears outstanding in 1986-87 of £195 million.

Rates (Basildon)

22. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the rate increase for Basildon district council for each of the last three years.

Mr. Hunt: The change in the local rate for Basildon district council was 0·2 per cent. for 1987-88, minus 6 per cent. for 1988-89 and 57·2 per cent. for 1989-90.

South Africa (Sporting Links)

23. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take further steps to stop or discourage sporting links with South Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: Government policy on sporting links with South Africa is set out in the Gleneagles agreement. We remain fully committed to the agreement and take every opportunity to give effect to that commitment.

Pollution (Irish Sea)

24. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken by his Department in conjunction with others to monitor the level of pollution in the Irish sea.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Regular monitoring for a wide range of purposes and substances takes place in the Irish sea, undertaken mainly by the National Rivers Authority in the case of rivers and estuaries and the Fisheries Departments for offshore site. The Department of the Environment also contributes, as does the work of dedicated research agencies such as the Natural Environment Research Council.

Local Government Finance

25. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many single person households with an existing rates liability can expect to benefit from the poll tax transitional relief scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: I estimate that about 110,000 single adult households will benefit from the community charge transitional relief scheme.

26. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much more the rate support grant figure for 1989-90 would be increased if 2,000 of the residents of Langbaurgh were black.

Mr. Chope: I will write to my hon. Friend.

54. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what help will be available under the poll tax transitional relief scheme to private tenants who presently pay a combined rent and rates bill to their landlord.

Mr. Chope: Private tenants who pay a combined rent and rates bill to their landlord will be eligible for community charge transitional relief on the same basis as other chargepayers. They will be entitled to transitional relief provided that a comparison between their assumed rates bill for 1989-90 and either one or two assumed community charges (depending on the number of community chargepayers in the property) shows an increase of more than £156 a year.

55. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what allowance he has made for local factors when setting the levels of community charge or poll tax which he considers will meet standard spending needs for local authorities in Northumberland.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend's detailed proposals for the calculation of standard spending assessments were set out in the draft revenue support grant distribution report issued at the time of his announcement to the House on 6 November. The same method will apply to all authorities with similar functions and will make use of a large number of indicators to reflect local conditions.

56. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the administrative costs of the poll tax transitional relief scheme.

Mr. Chope: An estimate of the administrative costs of the community charge transitional relief scheme will be made on the light of a study being undertaken for the Department by Peat Marwick McLintock and discussions with the local authorities associations.

77. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his analysis of the effect on various households types of the losses and gains upon introduction of the poll tax using the charges listed in his 6 November statement will be available.

Mr. Chope: Shortly.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take note of the representations made by Stoke on Trent city council expressing its concerns about the Department of Environment letter of 6 November about the loss of £18 million of Government grants to charge payers in the city; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: All representations, including those from Stoke on Trent city council, will be taken into account before my right hon. Friend makes final decisions about the revenue support grant settlement for 1990-91.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 120, what were the changes in the regulations to ensure that people being cared for in the community will receive the same relief from the standard community charge as those in residential care homes.

Mr. David Hunt: Regulation 6 of the Community Charges (Miscellaneous Provisions) (No. 2) Regulations 1989, which were laid before the House on 7 December, prescribes, among other things, two extra classes of property for the purposes of the standard charge. One class covers property which is unoccupied because the person who formerly lived there is resident somewhere else for the purpose of receiving personal care. The other covers property which is unoccupied because the person who formerly lived there has moved in order to provide personal care to someone else. The maximum multiplier for both classes is zero for 12 months after the property becomes unoccupied. Charging authorities have discretion to allow a longer period of relief for such properties.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many students there are in full-time education and receiving an increase from their employers since qualifying for the 80 per cent. student discount under the poll tax rules.

Mr. Patten: I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science that these statistics are not available.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made of the number of student nurses who will give up their training because they are unable to meet the full cost of their poll tax obligation.

Mr. Patten: No estimate is necessary since no such effect is likely.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what would be the full cost of extending to student nurses the rights to poll tax rebates available to other full-time students;

(2) what is the likely number of full-time student nurses who will be obliged to pay the full cost of the poll tax.

Mr. Patten: I understand that there are approximately 43,500 pre-registration nursing students in schools of nursing, and that by the end of March next year there will be approximately 1,500 nurses being trained under Project 2,000. Project 2,000 student nurses will qualify for student relief from the community charge. Over the next few years the scheme will be extended to cover all pre-registration nursing trainees receiving their training in schools of nursing.

Based on these figures, and an average community charge of £278, the revenue forgone from extending student relief to all pre-registration students would be about £9·3 million.

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each local authority the total as returned by community charges registration officers of (a) the numbers of persons subject to a personal community charge, excluding students eligible for relief under section 13 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, (b) one fifth of students eligible for relief under section 13 of the 1988 Act and (c) the estimated full-year equivalent of the number of individuals liable to contribute to a collective community charge of the authority in 1990-91, in response to the notice issued on 21 November under section 139A of the Local Government Finance Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The response to the notice was excellent and the results demonstrate that authorities have been very successful in compiling their community charges registers. Every community charges registration officer made a return although one return received at the last minute was illegible having been corrupted in the course of facsimile transmission.

The total of the forms received is 99·95 per cent. of the Government's estimate based on OPCS information. The information for individual authorities has been laid in the Library of the House.

I do not propose to recalculate the figures circulated with the consultation letter of 6 November 1989 to local authority associations using this new information until I have completed my consideration of the representations made in response to that letter.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he could give the total amounts of support from central Government for the expenditure of Somerset county council in the years 1987-88, 1988-89, and 1989-90 and the latest estimate for such support for 1990-91.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 December 1989]: The available information is as follows:

Central government grants[1] to Somerset county council

	£ million
1987-88	89·7
1988-89	94·3
1989-90	93·5

[1] Comprising rate support grant, specific and supplementary grants.

Somerset county council, as a precepting authority, will not receive revenue support grant in 1990-91 and no estimates of specific grants payable in 1990-91 are available for individual authorities.

Lakes and Rivers

28. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those lakes and rivers in England and Wales that show signs of acidification.

Mr. Trippier: The second report of the Department's acid waters review group, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, identified those areas of the United Kingdom that are susceptible to acid deposition as well as the location of known acid waters. Further studies under the Department's air pollution research programme are continuing and will be published.

Unified Business Rate

29. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has recently received any representations regarding the implementation of the unified business rate in England and Wales.

113. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has held with representatives of the small business community on the introduction of the unified business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has received a number of representations from individual businesses and business organisations on aspects of the new unified business rate in England.

45. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from businesses in the south-east of England regarding the implementation of the unified business rate.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from businesses in the south-east and elsewhere on aspects of the new unified business rate.

As a result of representations from bodies representing small businesses, my right hon. Friend announced on 27 July that the threshold for more generous transitional arrangements would be doubled to £15,000 and £10,000 rateable value for properties, respectively, in London and elsewhere. He also announced on 6 November his provisional view that the non-domestic rating multiplier for 1990-91 would be 36p, a figure below that expected by the business community and generally welcomed by it. And, on 7 December, he laid before Parliament an order to allow where necessary for larger annual reductions in rate bills during the transitional period than previously expected.

87. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the unified business rate for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 29 November, at column 252.

Globe Theatre

30. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision about the scheduling of the Globe theatre.

Mr. Trippier: Having considered the advice of his professional advisers English Heritage and representations received, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today included the remains of the recently discovered Globe theatre on the schedule of ancient monuments. I should like to acknowledge the leading part which the developers, Hanson, played in financing the archaeological excavation which led to the discovery of the remains.

Rented Housing

31. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to expand the numbers of council houses and cheaper rented houses in rural communities to deal with the increase in homelessness and the developing queues for rented housing.

Mr. Chope: We have planned for a major increase over the next three years in public funding through the Housing Corporation for new subsidised rented housing development by housing associations. Some of the extra resources will go to rural areas, and we have recently announced an increase in the targets for the Housing Corporation special rural programme aimed at smaller villages. Rural areas should also benefit from the encouragement we have given to private investment in the rented sector through deregulation of rents and tax relief under the business expansion scheme.

Engagements

33. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 13 December.

Mr. Chris Patten: My official engagements for Wednesday 13 December are:

Meetings with ministerial colleagues, DOE Ministers and Officials.
Cabinet Committee meeting.
Ministerial meeting.
First order questions.
Address national parks conference.
Cabinet Committee meeting.
DOE official engagement.
Meeting with colleagues and officials.

Barn Elms

34. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards there are for the preservation of the reservoirs at Barn Elms, Barnes.

Mr. Howard: Section 8 of the Water Act confers duties on the water companies in respect of all their land to further conservation, protect the landscape and public access and provide for recreation. These duties are enforceable by the Secretary of State who has approved a statutory code of practice, debated in the House in July, on conservation, access and recreation which gives guidance to companies on the performance of these duties and promotes good practice.

Section 152 of the Water Act further provides that water companies may not dispose of land in national parks, the Broads, areas of outstanding natural beauty or sites of special scientific interest without the consent of the Secretary of State or in accordance with a general authorisation; and that the Secretary of State may require that such land be first offered for sale to a suitable conservation body or that it be indefinitely protected by convenants or management agreements.

Barn Elms reservoir was notified as an SSSI in 1975 under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949. I understand that the Nature Conservancy Council, which is responsible for this matter, is considering the representations it has received about its proposal announced in 1988 to denotify the reservoir as an SSSI. If Barn Elms reservoir remains an SSSI it will fall within the scope of the controls under section 152 relating to disposals of environmentally sensitive land.

The safeguards are in addition to the ordinary protection afforded by planning legislation.

Community Charge

35. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Oxfordshire county council concerning the community charge levels for 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: We have received a letter from the chief executive of the county council making representations on the proposals for the grant settlement.

The Secretary of State will consider the points made before he makes his final decisions on the settlement.

32. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from local authorities about the community charge.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities, to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours).

Inner Cities

36. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to revive inner city areas.

Mr. David Hunt: A wide range of action is being undertaken under the Government's Action for Cities initiative to revive our inner cities. Expenditure under the initiative has increased from £3 billion in 1988-89 to £3·5 billion in 1989-90. In developing our policies for the future we will seek to develop a genuine partnership between all those involved in the regeneration of their areas. On 6 December I announced the formation of a new ministerial team to spearhead and co-ordinate action in the inner cities. Each city action team and inner city task force will have its own Minister committed to advising and assisting the CAT in its vital regeneration work.

Housing Associations

37. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to increase grant rates for London housing associations.

Mr. Chope: The annual review of grant rates is currently under way.

City Grants

38. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses for rent have been provided with the aid of city grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: One city grant project providing dwellings specifically for rent has so far been approved —the construction of 22 flats at Coach lane, North Shields.

89. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many authorities in West Yorkshire are considered for city grants in their area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Applications for city grant are invited from three of the five local authority areas in West Yorkshire. The new grant has been very successful since its introduction in May 1988 and the available resources are being fully utilised by projects within the areas from which applications are invited.

117. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many city grants have been awarded to Nottingham since 1988; and what is their total value.

Mr. Moynihan: Ten city grants totalling £7·5 million have been approved to support projects in Nottingham. This is the largest number of grants approved for any local authority area.

Green Bill

39. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had about funding for local authorities tor measures in the proposed green Bill.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with representatives of the local authorities to discuss local authority finance, including the case for additional spending. In addition we have considered carefully the responses from local authorities to the several consultation papers issued by my Department proposing legislation to improve the effectiveness of local pollution control.

Telford

40. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Telford development corporation to discuss the future of the town.

Mr. Chope: I last met Mr. Frank Jones on 29 November when we discussed a number of matters of mutual interest.

Improvement Grants

41. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of money is allocated for improvement grants for the year 1989-90; what amount is proposed for the year 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We make general allocations to local authorities to cover spending on the whole range of housing activities. Within their total resources, and the requirements of the housing legislation, councils are free to decide how much to devote to improvement grants, and how much to other purposes.

Rural Development

42. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions he intends to make on the drawing up on the next 10 years strategic plans to ensure that rural development is adequately provided for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: A framework for planning at the local level will be provided by regional guidance and revised and simplified strategic plans. We have already issued guidance to help metropolitan and London authorities prepare unitary development plans. For other areas, a planning policy guidance note issued for consultation on 27 November encourages county councils to prepare advice for the Secretary of State on regional planning issues and to review their structure plans. These will include policies on the rural economy, based on current Departmental advice.

Development Programmes

43. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that developers take full account of environmental considerations and consult with relevant environmental authorities before embarking on development programmes.

Mr. Moynihan: Local planning authorities are required to consult a wide range of bodies on planning applications and to take all material considerations into account when deciding whether to grant planning permission. These provisions have been widened and strengthened by the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 under which applicants must provide environmental statements for projects which are likely to have significant environmental effects; the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission must be consulted about all applications to which these regulations apply. While there are no statutory requirements for developers to consult public bodies with environmental responsibilities prior to submission of planning applications, developers are advised (for example in my Department's recently published booklet "Environmental Assessment—A Guide to the Procedures") to undertake such consultations so as to ensure that schemes are designed with environmental considerations in mind.

Homelessness (Wakefield)

44. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of homeless people in the area of the Wakefield district council; what action has been prepared to help these people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The City of Wakefield metropolitan district council reported 832 households as having been accepted as homeless during the period from the third quarter of 1988 to the second quarter of 1989.

Homelessness was one of the issues discussed by officials of my Department and representatives of the authority at a meeting last month to discuss the council's housing investment programme submission. It is one of the factors taken into account in making the HIP allocations, being announced this week.

Water Privatisation

47. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the new measures of protection the water consumer will now have available as a result of the completion of water privatisation.

Mr. Howard: The Water Act 1989 established a new regulatory framework to accompany privatisation which will ensure the protection of customers in respect of the quality and standard of service they receive and the price they pay.

These measures include the establishment of a new National Rivers Authority, separate from the companies, with direct responsibility for the health of the water environment and regulation of environmental standards, and the introduction of a new drinking water inspectorate which will help ensure that the new legal standards for drinking water quality are met.

A new independent regulator of the water and sewerage industry, the director general of water services has been appointed. His main tasks are to enforce the new system of economic regulation of the industry and to protect the interests of customers.

Companies will be subject to a new system of price control. Customers' interests will be protected in respect of the charges they pay as these will be limited in the first instance by the K factors set by the Secretary of State. It will be the director general's responsibility to ensure that these K factors continue to reflect correctly the obligations imposed on the companies. He will also have a duty to ensure that the prices fixed by the companies are fair between different classes of customers, so that domestic and industrial customers both pay their fair share.

The director general will also be responsible for monitoring the companies' performance in providing satisfactory levels of customer service and for ensuring that they comply with the conditions under which they are appointed. These provide amongst other things that the companies prepare and publish codes of practice for customers setting out the services to be provided and to publish codes of practices on disconnections and on leakage. A guaranteed standards scheme has been established setting out certain standards for day-to-day relations between companies and domestic customers. If standards are not met then customers will be entitled to a payment or credit of £5. In addition companies are required to prepare asset management plans and submit them to the director general. This provides an assurance to customers that companies have made long-term plans for the maintenance of their underground assets and for the expenditure and investment required to maintain and improve their systems.

Customer service committees will be established to represent customers' interests in each of the ten regions. The CSC's, who will report to the director-general, will be able to investigate complaints and report on any matter which appears to them to affect customer's interests.

Privatisation will also provide a spur to greater efficiency and thus benefit the consumer.

92. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of the planned investment programme over the next 10 years of the privatised water companies in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: The estimated investment expenditure by the 10 newly privatised water and sewage businesses in England and Wales, required by the programmes of which account was taken by the Secretaries of State in setting the initial levels of K, is £24·6 billion in prices prevailing at November 1989.

Global Warming

48. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to increase the monitoring of global warming.

Mr. Trippier: The science review working group of the WMO/UNEP intergovernmental panel on climate change, chaired by the United Kingdom, is assessing the requirements for monitoring with regard to global warming and climate change. The Government will take the panel's report, due in the autumn of 1990, into account in planning appropriate monitoring programmes.

119. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any assessment has been made of the contribution to global warming made by nitrate and nitrate fertilisers.

Mr. Trippier: Assessments of the effect of fertiliser use, including those containing nitrates, on the emission of nitrous oxide from soil have been made but are subject to great uncertainty. The state of understanding of emissions and future concentrations of all the major greenhouse gases is one of the topics included in the science review, chaired by the United Kingdom, of the intergovernmental panel on climate change which will report in the autumn of 1990.

Pollution (Eastern Europe)

49. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations are being made regarding environmental pollution from eastern European countries.

Mr. Trippier: No representations have been made recently. However, the Government are working actively to encourage the adoption of environmentally sound and sustainable policies in eastern European countries. To assist with this my Department has just announced a contribution of £50,000 for the east Europe programme of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature (IUCN). Efforts are being pursued specifically through the group of 24 and its working groups on aid to Poland and Hungary and also through the 300 million ecu aid fund for these countries established by the European Community. We are urging that pollution surveys should be undertaken in Poland and Hungary as a first step in establishing an environmentally-sound base for sustainable aid in those countries.

Fossil Fuel Power Stations

50. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many fossil fuel power stations the Government expect to have been retrofitted to reduce sulphur emissions by the year 1992.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom is committed to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions from existing large plants by 20 per cent. by 1993, 40 per cent. by 1998 and 60 per cent. by 2003. Meeting this commitment will involve a range of measures by United Kingdom industry, including retrofitting at least 12,000 MW of electricity generating capacity with flue gas desulphurisation equipment. The Central Electricity Generating Board has already begun to retrofit Drax power station, which contributes one-eighth of CEBG output, but the retrofit will not be completed until after 1992.

Research

51. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the planned percentage increase in expenditure by his Department on environmental research in 1992-93 over the current year.

68. Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total increase in planned expenditure by his Department's environmental research programme in the next financial year.

Mr. Trippier: The expenditure by the Department on environmental research is planned to increase by 20·6 per cent. in 1992-93 over the current year, amounting to an increase of £7·4 million over the provision for the current year of £36 million. Of this increase, £5·2 million is planned for the next financial year.

Funding, Sheffield

52. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what private and public funding has been hitherto available to the Sheffield development corporation.

Mr. Moynihan: We have made available £17·5 million grant-in-aid to Sheffield development corporation between its designation in June 1988 and the end of March 1990. A further £19 million has been allocated for 1990-91.

It is estimated that private sector investment totalling nearly £200 million will have been committed to developments within the corporation's area by the end of the current financial year.

Homelessness

57. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra resources local authorities will receive over the next two years to tackle the problem of homelessness.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 4 December at column 36.

58. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the problems caused for Luton by outside local authorities housing homeless people in the borough who subsequently become eligible for housing by the borough council.

Mr. Chope: I will write to my hon. Friend.

64. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of homeless people in the area of Barnsley district council; what action he is prepared to take to help these people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The number of households reported to my Department as having been accepted by Barnsley metropolitan borough council as homeless during the period from the third quarter of 1988 to the second quarter of 1989 was 160.

Homelessness in the area was discussed at a meeting between councillors and officers of Barnsley metropolitan borough council and officials of my Department in early October to discuss the council's housing investment programme submission, and is one of the factors involved in making decisions on the housing investment programme allocations for 1990-91, being announced this week.

69. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of homeless people in the Greater London area on 29 November.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities make returns to the Department on numbers of households accepted as homeless on a quarterly and not daily basis.

The figures for the latest quarter ending 30 June 1989 are in the Library.

98. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources housing associations will receive over the next two years to reduce the problem of homelessness.

Mr. Chope: The Housing Corporation, which provides grants and loans to housing associations, will receive an additional £36 million in 1990-91, and £37 million in 1991-92, as part of the Government's homelessness initiative. This is additional to the Housing Corporation's main programme of capital expenditure, in the distribution of which a high priority is given to schemes designed to alleviate homelessness.

105. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the likely effect of his recent announcement on homelessness, 15 November, Official Report, columns 243-44, on those who are currently sleeping rough.

Mr. Chope: It is too early to say what will happen to particular groups of people. We have invited bids from local authorities and housing associations, for the £250 million of extra resources we have made available to tackle problems of homelessness in the pressure areas, and we are also inviting charitable, and voluntary organisations to apply for further resources to intensify and improve their services to people who are actually or potentially homeless.

106. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for the number of households accepted as homeless.

Mr. Chope: I will write to the hon. Member.

Green Belt

59. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards the maintenance of green belt land.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend continues to be fully committed to upholding green belt policy as set out in planning policy guidance note 2.

Football Clubs (Membership Scheme)

60. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied that the necessary technology exists to implement the Government's identification card scheme for association football.

Mr. Moynihan: The working party which was set up by the football authorities to undertake preparatory work for the national membership scheme has issued an invitation to tender to the seven companies and consortia which are bidding for the contract to operate the scheme. It will be for the Football Membership Authority to decide on the technology on which the scheme should be based and to ensure that it has been tested properly.

Rented Accommodation

61. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on his policy for increasing the provision of low-cost rented accommodation.

Mr. Chope: The Government have taken a variety of measures to encourage the supply of rented housing, including the deregulation of private letting and the encouragement of private investment in housing associations. In addition public funding for the Housing Corporation is being substantially increased from £815 million this year to £1,736 million by 1992-93, mainly for the development of new rented housing by housing associations.

Recycling

63. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to require householders to segregate their household rubbish for recycling.

Mr. Heathcoat- Amory: The Government have no such plans at present, but my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry will be monitoring closely the results of the "Recycling City" experiment in Sheffield which involves the issue to several thousand households of blue bins for the purpose of segregating recyclable waste. If successful it is hoped that the experiment, which is receiving Government support, will be widely replicated.

82. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking to encourage the spread of waste recycling practices and technology.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department is currently considering adding recycling to the categories of project eligible for support under the environmental protection technology (EPT) scheme which encourages the development of environmentally responsible technologies. In addition my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry are supporting a range of studies and research projects relating to waste recycling and the "Recycling City" project in Sheffield in which several thousand households are participating.

118. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to visit Sheffield to observe its experimental waste recycling project.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to visit the "Recycling City" project in Sheffield, but I opened the kerbside collection stage of the project on 21 November. The project will be closely monitored by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Stonehenge

65. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by English Heritage on the establishment of a new visitor centre at Stonehenge.

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to say that agreement has recently been reached between the Ministry of Defence and English Heritage about an access route, across MOD land, to the site of the proposed new visitor centre at Larkhill West, just north of Stonehenge. There remains a considerable amount of detailed preparation and planning work to be done but I know that English Heritage will now be directing their energies wholeheartedly, in discussion with MOD, the local authorities and other interested parties, towards making significant early progress with these next stages.

English Heritage's aim is to develop a visitor centre worthy of Stonehenge's international importance as a world heritage site and a major attraction to tourists. It hopes that the centre will cater for up to 1 million visitors each year and plans to include a full, imaginative interpretation of Stonehenge using the latest exhibition techniques to inform visitors. In recognition of the importance which the Government attach to the development of appropriate visitor facilities at Stonehenge, we included in the £3 million additional funding which we are allocating to English Heritage in 1990-91 a sum of £500,000 to enable extra resources to be used to be put into working up the project as rapidly as possible.

Water Authorities

66. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increase in salaries for chief executives and chairmen of the water authorities over the past two years and since flotation.

Mr. Howard: The chairmen of the English water authorities, and those chief executives appointed to the authorities' boards by the Secretary of State, received salary increases of between 8·7 per cent. and 10·1 per cent. With effect from 1 July 1988 and an increase of 7·5 per cent. with effect from 1 July 1989. The salaries of chief executives who were not board members were a matter for the authorities themselves. Following the flotation directors' salaries as well as staff salaries are now for the privatised companies to determine. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales was responsible for approving the salaries of the chairman and chief executive of the Welsh Water Authority.

Litter

67. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to encourage householders and businesses to be more accountable for the litter outside their premises.

Mr. Trippier: I shall continue to encourage householders, businesses and everyone else to take a responsible attitude towards litter, wherever it might be. We are currently looking at ways to involve commercial frontagers in the cleaning up of their immediate environment.

Dogs

70. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the registration of dogs.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have received 1,600 ministerial letters and 2,500 letters from members of the public which expressed a wide range of opinions on the subject of dog registration. The same was true of the 300 responses received to the consultation paper.

Estate Action

71. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total provision for Estate Action over the current year and 1990.

Mr. Chope: The Estate Action budget for 1989-90 is £190 million. A further £190 million will be made available for 1990-91.

Private Tenancies

72. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any estimate of the rate of decline in the number of private tenancies since the introduction of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Chope: No. The fundamental reason for the introduction of part I of the Housing Act 1988 was to increase the supply of privately-rented accommodation. It is too early to make a firm assessment as to the impact of the new regime on the rental market. We shall be carrying out detailed evaluations as soon as practicable. But initial impressions are very encouraging. In particular, it is estimated that more than £350 million has been invested in business expansion scheme companies letting homes on assured tenancies. With an average price of £50,000 per property, that means an extra 6,000 to 7,000 homes available for letting.

Drinking Water

73. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department provides to those concerned about the quality of their drinking water.

Mr. Howard: The Water Act 1989 and regulations made under it clarify and strengthen the requirements for drinking water quality. In addition to the local authorities' continuing role of checking the quality of water supplies, the new drinking water inspectorate will seek to ensure that drinking water standards are met. Also, it is now a criminal offence for water undertakers to supply water which is unfit for human consumption.

Trafford Park

74. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will pay an official visit to Trafford park.

Mr. Chris Patten: I hope to be able to take up my hon. Friend's invitation to visit Trafford park later next year in conjuction with a visit to the Trafford park industrial council AGM.

Competitive Tendering

75. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any indication of the savings being achieved by local authorities as a result of the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering for certain services.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No precise figures are available at present, but the evidence suggests that substantial savings can be achieved as a result of the new requirements for competition in local government services. This is true whether work is awarded to an outside contractor or is retained in-house. As I explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 1 December at column 212 the results of a research project on the effects of compulsory competitive tendering should be available in the spring.

97. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers he has to take action against local authorities which fail to let contracts under compulsory competitive tendering on an impartial basis.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Secretary of State has powers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 to direct that an authority shall cease to have power to carry out certain types of work or that they may only carry out such work subject to specified conditions, if it appears to him that the authority have acted anti-competitively or breached any of the other requirements of the legislation.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the minimum and maximum contract periods specified in the Department of the Environment's circular on compulsory competitive tendering; what are the periods prescribed by the Welsh Office for Wales; and what are the reasons for the differences between the two.

Mr. Patten: The Local Government Act 1988 (Defined Activities) (Specified Bodies) (England) Regulations 1988 specified minimum and maximum contract periods for the activities subject to compulsory competition, under the Local Government Act 1988. They are as follows:

Table I

Specified periods for authorities with education functions

The Local Government Act 1988 (Defined Activities) (Specified Periods) (Wales) Regulations 1988, as amended by the Local Government Act 1988 (Defined Activities) (Specified Periods) (Wales) (Amendment) Regulations 1988, specified the following periods:

Differences in the specified contract periods reflect decisions made by my predecessor and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales in the light of circumstances pertaining in England and Wales respectively.

English Heritage

78. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the grant-in-aid to English Heritage is planned to increase over the next two years.

Mr. Trippier: We are allocating an additional £3 million to English Heritage in 1990-91 and an additional £3·02 million in 1991-92, taking its total grant-in-aid in that year to £79·8 million—a 56 per cent. cash increase over 1984-85. These significant extra sums reflect the Government's recognition of the importance of the heritage to the quality of life, and its major contribution to the tourism industry. The increases will enable English Heritage to build on its successful record in several different ways. It will be able to invest more in the maintenance and presentation of its key historic sites—already a source of significant enjoyment and education for an increasing number of adults and youngsters. I am particularly pleased that some of the increase can be earmarked for preparatory work on the proposed new visitor centre at Stonehenge—one of our most outstanding national monuments. Other areas of English Heritage's important responsibilities which will benefit from these extra resources include archaeology and the review of some lists of historic buildings which were produced in the early 1970s and are not up to the standards of the more recent lists.

Action for Cities

79. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the achievements of the action for cities programme.

Mr. David Hunt: Excellent progress continues to be made in the regeneration of our inner cities under the Government's action for cities programme, expenditure on which is planned to increase from £3 billion in 1988-89 to about £3·5 billion this year. Unemployment in the 57 inner city target areas has fallen by nearly a quarter over the last year. Massive investment is taking place in reclaiming derelict land and in new factories, housing, shopping centres, roads and other infrastructure. Recorded crime fell significantly in the Metropolitan police force areas over the last year. The Government are working in partnership with business, local government, the voluntary sector and local people to build on the progress already made and to ensure that the pace of inner city regeneration is maintained. On 6 December I announced the formation of a new ministerial team to spearhead and co-ordinate action in the inner city areas. Each city action team and inner city task force will have a Minister to advise and assist it in its vital regeneration work.

Housing, Hackney

80. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to visit Hackney to discuss housing.

Mr. Chope: No. The Department has regular contacts with the borough and has recently held a meeting with the council in the current housing investment programme round.

Toxic Waste

81. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the toxic waste material which is held in Wath upon Dearne, Rotherham to be removed.

Mr. Trippier: My officials are in close touch with the United States Environmental Protection Agency and the other parties involved. We are pressing hard for the early removal of this material.

"Keep Safe" Scheme

83. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will report on the progress of the "Keep Safe" security grants scheme in the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham.

Mr. Moynihan: This crime prevention scheme was first approved by my Department in 1985. Some 5,500 security installations have now been completed. The scheme has received a total of £386,000 in urban programme funds to date, of which £141,900 has been approved for works to be undertaken this year.

River Pollution

84. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures the National Rivers Authority has taken against polluters since it was established.

Mr. Howard: The National Rivers Authority has taken positive steps against polluters by the prosecution of offenders, the issue of warning letters, and the recovery of costs relating to pollution incidents. I understand that since 1 September the NRA has decided to institute legal proceedings in 102 cases of water pollution.

Greenhouse Effect

85. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures Her Majesty's Government have taken to secure international agreement on the need for action on the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Trippier: We actively support the work of the inter-governmental panel on climate change and in particular the United Kingdom chairs its working group on scientific assessment. The United Kingdom is leading efforts to gain support for an international framework convention on climate change. This was unanimously supported at the recent conference of environment Ministers in the Netherlands. Our leading role in promoting international initiatives on climate change was underlined by the Prime Minister's speech at the United Nations on 8 November.

Rents

88. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will meet housing associations and local authorities to discuss proposals to determine criteria for affordable rents.

Mr. Chris Patten: My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning frequently meets representatives of local authorities and housing associations, and questions of rent policy are discussed when appropriate.

Hot Food Shops

90. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support he has given to Bexley council in its attempt to control the number of hot food shops in Welling.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department's development control policy note 11 "Service Uses in Shopping Areas" gives advice on the planning considerations which are relevant to proposals for hot food shops.

Bed and Breakfast

91. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families accepted as homeless are currently living in (a) bed-and-breakfast accommodation and (b) other forms of temporary accommodation.

Mr. Chope: I will write to the hon. Member.

New Homes

93. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has on the number of new homes which stand unsold and unoccupied.

Mr. Chope: The Department does not collect information on the number of new homes which are unsold and unoccupied.

Public Inquiries

94. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for changes in the environmental criteria relating to major public inquiries.

Mr. Moynihan: We have no proposals to change the procedures for major planning inquiries. Environmental considerations will invariably be an important issue at such inquiries. In the case of planning applications made on or after 15 July 1988 for many projects likely to have significant environmental effects, developers are also required to provide an environmental statement of the implications to their proposals.

New Towns

95. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the policies of the Government on future new town developments.

Mr. Chope: The new towns programme in England is coming to a conclusion. New settlements however are an option that planning authorities in England can explore, in co-operation with private developers, in formulating their housing policies. New settlements could have a role to play in reducing pressure for new housing in existing towns and villages, but whether to proceed by this means and the finding of suitable locations is generally a matter for decision at the local level, through the development plan process.

My right hon. Friend has no responsibility for planning or new towns in Scotland or Wales.

Olympic Games

96. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice and support is being given by his Department to those bodies bidding to hold the 1996 olympic games in Manchester.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government wish Manchester every success in its bid to host the 1996 olympic games and will offer the bid team whatever promotional help they can. We have already offered assurances about paying full regard to the olympic rules and byelaws and doing all within our power to facilitate entry and unrestricted movement to members of the olympic family.

Projects (Kirklees)

99. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of city grants that have been made during the current year to projects in Kirklees for (a) housing, (b) industrial and (c) commercial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: in the current financial year, city grant of £222,649 was approved for an industrial project at the Ringway industrial centre in Kirklees on 5 April 1989. The project, costing £788,000 in all, involves the development of 1.75 acres of former railway yard to provide four business warehouse units, with landscaping and car parking facilities.

Regeneration Projects

100. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much city grant has been awarded to regeneration projects in Derby since July.

Mr. Moynihan: Two offers of city grant totalling £1·6 million have been made to support projects in Derby since July 1989.

Housing, Bradford

101. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reach decisions on grant applications for new homes to rent and for sale on the Lower Grange estate in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: On 13 November, my Department received an application for Estate Action support in respect of the dwellings on the Lower Grange estate which the City of Bradford metropolitan council intend to refurbish.

Housing (Land Prices)

102. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the average land price content of the average priced house in the south east, the north west and England and Wales as a whole in 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The table shows average land prices per plot as a percentage of average new house prices. Land prices are restricted to purchases by the private sector of sites with planning permission and are therefore directly comparable with the average price of new houses than all houses (including secondhand purchases).

Land price per plot as a percentage of new dwelling price

	1979	1988
South East (excluding London)	20	45
North West	14	15
England and Wales	17	34

Climate Change

103. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role the United Kingdom delegation played at the Noordwijk conference on climate change.

Mr. Trippier: I believe the United Kingdom delegation contributed positively to a final declaration in which the nearly 70 countries present were able unanimously to endorse our call for an international framework convention on climate change, to support the work of the inter-governmental panel on climate change, and to recognise the need to stabilise emissions of carbon dioxide. Maintaining this international consensus will be essential to effective action to combat the greenhouse effect.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

104. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the world's carbon dioxide emissions come from the developed world and the underdeveloped world.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for carbon dioxide emissions from developed and undeveloped countries are subject to uncertainty due both to the definition of the terms and the assessment of emissions for particular countries. Recent estimates, defining developed countries as industrialised countries and centrally planned economies suggest that the undeveloped world accounts for about 15 per cent. of world carbon dioxide emissions from fossil fuel combustion.

Pollution Control

108. Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to legislate to put control of all forms of pollution within the same statutory framework of regulations.

Mr. Trippier: Pollution control requires different forms of expertise. The Government will be bringing forward legislation to provide more effective frameworks for controlling pollution best dealt with at the local level, and new systems at the national level for controlling the most dangerous or difficult processes.

116. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the ways in which the concept of integrated pollution control will help to protect the environment.

Mr. Trippier: Integrated pollution control (IPC) adopts a preventative approach to pollution control. The most polluting substances will be prevented or minimised at source and all substances will be rendered harmless. IPC applies the concept of the "best available techniques not entailing excessive cost" which provides an inbuilt dynamic to higher standards as techniques and technology improve. IPC will seek to achieve the best practicable environmental option, taking account of the effects on the environment as a whole.

122. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what predictions can be made about the levels of pollution from internal combustion engines between the present time and 2010.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has asked Warren Spring laboratory to revise the projections of exhaust emissions from road transport previously published in 1987 to take account of the new emission regulations agreed this year and the full range of current traffic projections.

Company Awareness

109. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage British companies to be more aware of environmental concerns.

Mr. Trippier: The Department aims to increase the level of environmental awareness generally. It supports the Department of Trade and Industry in the latter's business and environment programme, for example by working with the DTI and others to organise conferences for industry on environmental issues.

The Department of the Environment also operates an environmental protection technology scheme, which encourages technical innovation through grants to aid the development of low waste and pollution control technology. The Department has recently published a booklet "Clean Technology" obtainable from the EPT Office, Room B357, Romney house, 43 Marsham street, London SW1P 3PY.

Sports Council

110. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Sports Council; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: My most recent formal meeting with the chairman of the Sports Council was on 16 November at my meeting with the chairmen of the regional councils for sport and recreation. We discussed a number of issues including the Sports Council's grant-in-aid for 1990-91, my recent working party report on sport for people with disabilities, school sport and the impact of the new local authority capital expenditure rules on sport.

Tyne and Wear Development Corporation

111. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to visit the Tyne and Wear development corporation.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has no plans to visit the Tyne and Wear development corporation at present. However my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities plans to visit the corporation tomorrow.

Football Spectators Act

112. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he expects the provisions of the Football Spectators Act to be fully operational at all grounds.

Mr. Moynihan: We want the national membership scheme to be in place as soon as practicable. We will approve its introduction when we are satisfied that it will be effective, workable and safe. Against this background, it will be for the Football Membership Authority, in conjunction with the chosen supplier, to come forward with an acceptable timetable for implementation.

Wildlife and Trees

114. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the impact of pollutants on wildlife and trees especially in England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's review groups on acid waters and terrestrial effects have assessed the impacts of pollutants on freshwaters, crops, trees and vegetation in the United Kingdom. Copies of the reports have been placed in the Library of the House.

In the north and south-west of England, in Northern Ireland and in many parts of Scotland and Wales, there are areas with soils and underlying rocks sensitive to acid deposition. In some of these areas the deposition of pollutants has caused water and soil acidification. The principal impact on wildlife is a reduction of fish and invertebrate species in affected streams, and a consequent reduction in habitat for species which feed on them. The terrestrial effects review group identified air pollution as a potential stress on trees, but was unable to specify where or to what extent trees were adversely affected. The Department has decided to set up a further review group specifically to look at the latest evidence on the impact of air pollution or tree health.

Waste Disposal

115. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to legislate to separate local authority responsibilities in the regulation and management of waste disposal.

Mr. Trippier: The Environmental Protection Bill will include measures to separate local authority waste disposal operations into arm's length local authority controlled companies. The waste regulation authorities will then be responsible for the licensing and enforcement of both public and private sector facilities.

Mortgage Arrears

120. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of households who have been evicted as a result of mortgage arrears in the past 12 months.

Mr. Chope: The latest information on building society mortgages covers the 12 months to 30 June 1989. The Building Societies Association reported that societies took 12,730 properties into possession during this period. This figure represented 0·166 per cent. of building society mortgages outstanding at 30 June 1989. In the year to 30 June 1988, 21,000 properties were taken into possession, which represented 0·288 per cent. of outstanding mortgages. Figures for other mortgage lenders are not available.

Housing Corporation

121. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the projected increase in the budget of the Housing Corporation between the present year and 1992-93.

Mr. Howard: The Housing Corporation's capital programme of grants and loans to housing associations is planned to increase from £818 million in 1989-90, to £1,736 million in 1992-93, more than doubling over three years.

Nuclear Waste

53. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has a meeting scheduled with Nirex before Christmas, to discuss the disposal of low and medium level nuclear waste.

86. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has a meeting scheduled with Nirex before Christmas, to discuss the disposal of low and medium level nuclear waste.

107. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has a meeting scheduled with Nirex before Christmas to discuss the disposal of low and medium level nuclear waste.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Members to the answer which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond).

North Sea

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has on whether algae, in the North sea, have given off significant quantities of dimethyl sulphide; and if he will make a statement on the next stage of the Natural Environment Research Council project on evaluating seasonal cycles in the North sea.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that measurements of dimethyl sulphide (DMS) taken on NERC cruises as part of the NERC North sea community research project show a pronounced seasonal pattern. High levels of DMS in spring and summer, coinciding with the period of maximum algal activity, contrasted with low levels in the autumn/winter. Maximum DMS values in water occurred in April/May with high concentrations along the coast of France, Belgium, Holland and Germany. These results suggest that in the spring/summer the North sea algal production of DMS contributes at a rate equivalent to 25 per cent. of the rate for man-made emissions over Europe.

The 15-month NERC observational cruises programme in the North sea in now concluded. The next stage of the project involves detailed data analysis and interpretation, and the incorporation of data into models of the seasonal cycle of parameters in the North sea.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards compliance with the proposals made by the European Environment Commissioner on 29 November to clean up the North sea; and if he will estimate the likely cost of this programme to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Howard: The hon. Member may be referring to a proposal published by the Commission last month for a directive concerning municipal waste water treatment. If adopted, this would establish, inter alia, minimum standards of treatment before disposal for sewage from populations above a certain size. It would apply to discharges to all inland and coastal waters across the European Community. No discussions have yet taken place within the Council of Ministers on the proposals. The Department has commissioned Consultants in Environmental Sciences Ltd to assess the likely impact, including the cost, of certain aspects of the proposals. Their report is due early in the new year, and a copy will be made available to the House.

Radioactivity (Sellafield)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what problems with the levels of airborne radioactivity in the B-30 receiving pond facility at Sellafield have been reported to him in the past year.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Water Rates

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is considering bringing in any statutory procedures regarding disconnection for non-payment of water rates, by either a private or public authority.

Mr. Howard: No. Section 49 of the Water Act 1989 already lays down the procedure a water undertaker must follow before a water supply may be disconnected for non-payment of charges.

Housing (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why Lambeth borough council has been refused participation within the London mobility scheme for housing.

Mr. Chope: I understand that the London borough of Lambeth is currently suspended by the joint committee of the London area mobility scheme from the Greater London mobility scheme because it has not been contributing sufficient lettings to it. The suspension will, however, be lifted as soon as performance improves.

In the meantime tenants wishing to move from the borough can still do so through the other schemes operated by the London area mobility scheme—including the inter-borough nomination scheme and the mutual exchange bureau.

Trees

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what analysis he has made of the effects of acid deposition on trees; and what steps he is taking to mitigate the effects.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: An initial analysis of the effects of air pollution, including acid deposition, on trees was made by the United Kingdom terrestrial effects review group (TERG) in a report published in July 1988. Copies of the report are available in the House of Commons Library. Since then, additional scientific data have come to light both in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. Consequently a sub-group of TERG has been set up specifically to evaluate these extra data. The group will report in January 1991.

In order to mitigate the effects of acid deposition on the environment as a whole we are making substantial reductions in sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen (NOx) emissions from large combustion plants at a cost of over £2 billion. In addition we have agreed major reductions of NOx emissions from motor vehicles at a cost of about £1·5 billion per annum.

Housing (Blyth Valley)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total value of dwellings owned by Blyth Valley local authority calculated on the basis of 1988-89 right-to-buy sales and the total loan debt outstanding.

Mr. Chope: Under part VI of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, in determining housing revenue account subsidy, the Secretary of State may infer aggregate values of houses and other property within local authorities' housing revenue accounts from the average values of any of the houses and other property they have disposed of. The latest figure calculated on this basis for Blyth Valley is £158 million. This is subject to variation in the light of any futher information supplied by the local authority.

The total outstanding loan debt on dwellings in the ownership of Blyth Valley district council for 1988-89 as reported to the Department of the Environment by the local authority was £40·2 million.

Business Rates

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated business rate, in tabular form, for shops with a floor space of 500 sq ft, 2,000 sq ft, 5,000 sq ft, and 10,000 sq ft for each of the years 1989-90 to 1994-95 if situated in Sheen road, Richmond, showing percentage increases for each year over the actual for 1989-90.

Mr. Chope: It is not possible at this stage to make the estimates for which the hon. Member asks.

My right hon. Friend announced on 6 November his provisional view that the national non-domestic rate poundage for 1990-91 would be 36 pence. In subsequent years the poundage will increase by the rise in the retail price index or by such lesser amount as the Chancellor of the Exchequer determines.

The valuation office is currently carrying out a revaluation of non-domestic property and is required to deposit with local authorities the new rating lists in draft by 31 December.

There will be transitional arrangements to phase in the effect of the uniform business rate and the revaluation. The maximum increase in rate bills for properties in London will be 20 per cent. in real terms for those with new rateable values of £15,000 and above and 15 per cent. for those with values between £500 and £14,999. Large reductions in bills will also be subject to phasing.

NCC and Countryside Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations of policy led to his decision to retain the Countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council as separate bodies in England.

Mr. Trippier: The Government took into account the ecological, demographic and social circumstances in England and decided that the needs of nature conservation and the protection and enjoyment of the countryside would be best served by the retention of separate bodies for those purposes in this country.

Conservation Agencies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he will adopt to provide environmental auditing and accountability of the proposed new conservation agencies in Great Britain.

Mr. Trippier: The new conservation agencies in England, Scotland and Wales will be directly accountable to the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Scotland and Wales, respectively for the stewardship both of their individual and joint functions.

Environmental auditing is normally understood to mean the quantification of environmental costs and benefits in the economic or development context, rather than a means of assessing the work of public agencies.

Radioactive Contamination (Harwell)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to clean up the radioactive contamination at the Harwell tank farm, following the discovery of radioactive waste contamination on 24 May; what assessment has been made of the effects on Atomic Energy Research Establishment workers and members of the public of this leak; and what has been the cost of the clean-up operation to date.

Mr. Trippier: Low level radioactive contaminated water from the tank farm area is being treated in the Harwell effluent plant. The effect of the contamination on workers and members of the public is insignificant. Approximately £20,000 has been spent on the clean-up operation to date.

Boundaries

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce regulations governing the height of trees and hedges which form part of boundaries between private properties, similar to planning regulations which currently govern the height of boundary walls.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of understaffing at Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and what proposals he has to meet the problem.

Mr. Trippier: The staff compliment for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was increased from 219 to 240 from 2 October 1989. Staff in post at 1 November 1989 was 199. Most of the vacancies are for pollution inspectors and to fill these posts Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are undertaking a recruitment campaign offering exceptional salary increases of 28·5 per cent. over those offered in the last recruitment round.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the annual report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will be published.

Mr. Trippier: The annual report for 1988-89 will be published as soon as possible in the new year.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often samples of the flue gases from the Rechem plant at Pontypool are analysed for dioxin and polychlorinated biphenyl content by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he will summarise the results of such analysis by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution since 1987.

Mr. Trippier: Flue gases from the Rechem plant at Pontypool are sampled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and analysed specifically for polychlorinated biphenyl approximately twice a year. Figures are considerably less thay 0·01 mg/m^3. Sampling and analysis for dioxins and dibenzofurans is carried out less frequently. The latest summary figures for January 1989 are:

Tetrachlorodibenzodioxins (total)—less than 0·025 ng/m^3
Tetrachlorodibenzofurans (total)—0·12 ng/m^3

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest total number of staff employed by (a) Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and (b) the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Trippier: Staff in post in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution at 1 November were 199.

Staff in post in the National Rivers Authority at 31 October were 6,332.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which regional office of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will be responsible for meeting the environmental demands of Cleveland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The regulatory responsibilities of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in Cleveland will be discharged by the Northern region of HMIP, based in Leeds.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if replacements have been found for the three senior inspectors who resigned in 1989 from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 12 December 1989]: One senior member of staff resigned from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in 1989 and will leave at the end of the year. Arrangements are in hand to appoint a successor. Two senior members of staff resigned in 1988. Their posts have been absorbed into the reorganised structure of the inspectorate, details of which were announced on 2 October 1989.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reasons were tendered by the individuals concerned for the resignations from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution by Mr. Michael Thayer and other senior inspectors.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 12 December 1989]: It is not customary to disclose details of personnel matters.

Environment White Paper

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the proposed White Paper on the environment; and whether it will outline the structure of the proposed Scottish heritage agency.

Mr. Trippier: We intend to publish a White Paper by next autumn; it is too soon to comment on the detailed content.

Air Pollution

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on how many people are involved in monitoring air pollution in (a) the United States of America, (b) Britain and (c) other member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Trippier: This information could be obtained only at excessive cost. However, the United Kingdom acid deposition and air pollution monitoring networks, referred to in my answer of 7 December to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) are co-ordinated by about 33 staff at Warren Spring laboratory. Some of these sites are run by other consultants.

Many local authorities and other organisations in the United Kingdom monitor air pollution for their own purposes.

Pensions

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made to him by the local authority associations and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy on the funding of pensions liabilities; and when he will respond to such representations.

Mr. Christopher Patten: I have received a number of representations on this subject. I shall be responding shortly.

South Downs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to designate the South Downs as a national park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The South Downs is already designated as an area of outstanding natural beauty. My right hon. Friend has no plans to designate it as a national park.

PSA

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on his meetings with the Property Services Agency staff unions;

(2) when he next intends to consult trade unions about the privatisation of the Property Services Agency and the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend met the PSA trade unions on 26 September. It was a constructive meeting and he looks forward to having further meetings with them as the PSA progresses towards privatisation.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 6 December, Official Report, column 412, he will specify in what respects the briefing document sent to hon. Members by trade unions in respect of Property Services Agency legislation, was tendentious.

Mr. Chope: My judgment is based on the document as a whole.

Housebuilding

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for housebuilding in the public sector, starts and completions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The latest figures for housebuilding up to the end of October 1989 were released on 4 December 1989. A copy of the press notice is in the Library.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the future of Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Trippier: As Britain's national mapping organisation, the Ordnance Survey has earned wide respect and recognition for its surveying and cartographic activities. At the same time, the Government have encouraged Ordnance Survey to develop and expand its business on increasingly commercial lines. It is therefore proposed that Ordnance Survey should become a next steps agency and this is expected to take place in 1990.

Housing Associations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the average management and maintenance costs per dwelling owned by housing associations in each of the last three years.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 December 1989]: The information requested is not available. The hon. Gentleman will, however, find some information on this subject in a report called "The Nature and Effectiveness of Housing Management in England" by the centre for housing research, university of Glasgow. Copies of the report, which was published earlier this year, are available in the Library.

Pollution (Mersey)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the current pollution level of the Mersey; and what measures are planned to improve its quality.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The water quality of the Mersey estuary has improved since 1980 as a result of North West Water's programme of building interceptor sewers to divert sewage from outfalls to sewage treatment works. This continuing programme, which includes construction of a major new sewage treatment works at Sandon dock in Liverpool due to open next year, now forms part of the Mersey basin campaign project to improve the water quality and landward aspects of the Mersey system at an overall estimated cost of £4 billion. The project involves North West Water, central and local government, and business and voluntary organisations.

The National Rivers Authority is responsible for monitoring river and estuarial quality, and for securing any improvements which it considers are needed to meet new statutory water quality objectives to be set by the Secretary of State.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against student loans.

Mr. Jackson: Representations have expressed a variety of views on different aspects of the proposals. Many support the underlying principle that students in higher education should contribute to their living costs.

Research

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements exist between the Medical Research Council and Celltech on the exploitation of research results.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council and Celltech Ltd signed a memorandum of understanding for a period of five years on 2 November 1988.

The main feature of the memorandum of understanding is provision for regular dialogue between the council and Celltech. The understanding does not oblige the council to give preferential treatment in respect of new technologies.

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the numbers of pupils remaining in full-time education after 16 years.

Mr. Jackson: In 1988-89, 345,000 16-year-olds were participating in full-time education in England. The details are as follows:

	Pupils
Maintained schools:	180,000
Maintained further education colleges:	126,750
Independent schools:	38,300

This represents an overall full-time participation rate of 51 per cent.

Correspondence

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will reply to the letter of 19 September from the hon. Member for Oxford, East on the future of the Workers Educational Association.

Mr. Jackson: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will reply to the letter of 19 July from the hon. Member for Oxford, East on the points indicated in his letter of 17 October.

Mr. Jackson: I did not think that the hon. Member's letter required a reply.

Her Majesty's Senior Chief Inspector (Report)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when the next annual report of Her Majesty's senior chief inspector will be published on the state of schools;

(2) whether he intends to edit or amend the annual report of Her Majesty's senior chief inspector on the state of schools before it is published.

Mr. MacGregor: I expect to receive the annual report from the senior chief inspector early in the new year. When I do so I intend to publish it without editing or amendment.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which city technology colleges have signed agreements with his Department; and what areas these agreements cover.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will shortly be concluding funding agreements with all city technology colleges on the lines of the model agreement placed in the Library of the House earlier this year. Pending the conclusion of these agreements, there have been exchanges of letters with principal sponsors setting out their commitment and the conditions on which the Secretary of State accepted their sponsorship.

Bradford City Technology College

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money, to date, Dixons has paid towards capital and revenue expenditure at Bradford city technology college; what is the total financial commitment of Dixons to the capital and revenue expenditure of Bradford city technology college to date; by what dates Dixons is required to pay additional amounts; and whether any of these commitments are conditional on Dixons remaining free from takeover.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total financial commitment of the Dixons Group plc to the capital development of the Bradford city technology college is £1·1 million. This is being paid by a deed of covenant over five years in five equal payments of £220,000. The first payment was made in March 1989, the next being due in March 1990. Our agreement with Dixons is based on the understanding that the covenant by Dixons is such that it would have to be taken over by any successor of the Dixons Group plc.

Further Education

Mr. Derek Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) the 1986-87 and 1987-88 grant-related expenditure assessments for 16 to 19-year-olds' education provision by local education authority and (b) the actual level of expenditure for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Jackson: Table 1 shows the grant-related expenditure assessments (GREA) by local authority for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 for provision relating to 16 to 19-year-olds. The assessments shown are the GRE for school pupils aged over 16 (OSLA) and for non-advanced further education (NAFE) and the pooling GRE for advanced further education. The NAFE GRE includes further education provision for students aged over 19 and is distributed on the numbers of NAFE home students in full-time, part-time day release and block-release and youth training scheme (YTS) courses. The pooling GRE covers also provision for a wider age range.

Table 2 shows the net expenditure by local education authorities on non-special secondary education, polytechnics and other maintained further education establishments for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88, which cover the areas dealing with 16 to 19-year-olds' education: no separate figure is available for secondary education for pupils aged 16 and over. The grant-related expenditure assessments cannot be compared easily with the expenditure shown because the coverage of each figure is different. The expenditure figures include estimates for three authorities in both 1986-87 and 1987-88 which did not make returns.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid (Northern Ireland)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what is the present waiting period for appeals against refusals of applications for legal aid in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the operations of the legal aid service in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: The present average waiting period for appeals against refusals for civil legal aid in Northern Ireland is four months.

The Law Society of Northern Ireland produces an annual report on the operation of both civil and criminal legal aid which incorporates a report by the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal aid in Northern Ireland. The report for 1987-88 was laid before Parliament on 20 October 1989.

Taken Over Cases

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those cases taken over by any Government officer other than the Director of Public Prosecutions since 1980 and the reason for the takeover in each case.

The Attorney-General: The power to take over the conduct of criminal proceedings contained in section 6(2) of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 extends only to the Director of Public Prosecutions but that power may be exercised by a Crown prosecutor acting under his direction. Prior to the implementation of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 the corresponding legislation was the Prosecution of Offences Act 1979 which conferred a similar power on the Director of Public Prosecutions. That power was exercisable by an assistant Director of Public Prosecutions. A similar power is conferred on the director of the Serious Fraud Office by section 1(5)(b) of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 but has not been exercised. On the establishment of the Serious Fraud Office the conduct of a number of current cases passed by agreement from the Crown prosecution service to the Serious Fraud Office. I shall write to the hon. Member listing those cases. It is to be noted that neither the Director of Public Prosecutions nor the director of the Serious Fraud Office is correctly described as a Government officer.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Spirit Measures

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements will apply in future in Great Britain for measuring spirits for consumption on licensed premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Having considered the responses to my Department's consultation paper, I have concluded that the present range of imperial quantities of $\frac{1}{6}$, $\frac{1}{5}$ and $\frac{1}{4}$ gill for serving whisky, gin, rum and vodka should be replaced by a single round metric quantity of 25ml.

A single metric measure throughout Great Britain would have the advantage of enabling consumers to compare prices and monitor their alcohol consumption more easily. It would also allow instrument manufacturers to make economies of scale. Licensees should find the new quantity more convenient since it is an exact fraction of the bottle.

I therefore intend to lay in draft an order which would permit the four major spirits to be served in this new metric quantity from the middle of next year and would prohibit the use of the imperial quantities for this purpose from 1 January 1995.

British Aerospace

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the minute of the meeting of 4 July with British Aerospace at which tax benefits were discussed.

Mr. Ridley: The agreed way of recording this meeting was an exchange of letters between the advisers of British Aerospace and the Inland Revenue; copies of these letters dated 8 July have already been sent to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library correspondence between his predecessor and British Aerospace on 6, 12 July and 13 July.

Mr. Ridley: I have already done so, together with other letters between my predecessor and the British Aerospace chairman dated 14 July 1988 relating to the terms and conditions of the sale of Her Majesty's Government's shareholding in Rover Group to British Aerospace.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the raising of the ring fence for capital losses includes capital gains in property companies acquired by British Aerospace.

Mr. Ridley: Following the lifting of the contractual ring fence on capital losses which had been a part of the March 1988 conditional agreement for the sale of Rover, British Aerospace has the right to use Rover Group capital losses to set against gains to the same extent and subject to the same statutory conditions as any other group in equivalent circumstances.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information was provided to the European Commission of the tax benefits for British Aerospace of the Rover deal.

Mr. Ridley: The Commission was informed that the benefit of using Rover Group's carried forward pre-acquisition trading tax losses was effectively limited to £500 million by the conditional and the final agreement with BAe: that the March 1988 conditional agreement ring fenced the capital losses and disclaimed capital allowances so they could only be utilised by Rover Group; and that as part of the final agreement these would be unringfenced so that BAe would have the same freedom as that available under tax law to any other group. The Commission was made aware of the difficulty of estimating the value of restoring that freedom.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who paid the fees for (a) Rover's and (b) British Aerospace's advisers as part of the final contract with British Aerospace.

Mr. Ridley: As I explained in my statement of 30 November the Government paid Rover Group £1·5 million for its privatisation costs. BAe paid its own advisers' fees.

Steel Industry

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) on what date he was informed that a plate finishing mill was being stored at British Steel, Lackenby; whether he was consulted by British Steel before the company issued a denial of any knowledge of such a plant; whether he was consulted by British Steel before the company confirmed that a plate mill had been stored in Lackenby for several months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he regards British Steel plc's admission that it has been supportive of the Davy Corporation's acquisition of a second-hand Japanese plate finishing mill as likely to affect guarantees given by his Department relating to the future of the Scottish steel industry;

(3) whether the Government would intervene to stop British Steel plc going ahead with any closure proposals which relate to the Scottish plants covered by the guarantees issued by his Department on 3 December 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 12 December 1989]: The acquisition and disposition of items of plant are matters for British Steel. Ministers have not been, and do not expect to be, informed or consulted by the company on such matters. There are no current Government guarantees in relation to the future of any of British Steel's works, the last such guarantee having expired at the end of August 1988.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of assets in bankruptcy in the last available year were absorbed by the cost of the proceedings as opposed to distribution among creditors.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 December 1989]: The last year for which the information was maintained in the form requested was 1984. In that year out of every £1 of net assets realised in bankruptcy cases where the official receiver was trustee 64·5p was spent on administration expenses, 15p was paid to the preferential creditors and 20·5p was distributed among the unsecured creditors. The comparative figures for cases where a non-official trustee was appointed were 52·9p, 17·9p and 29·9p. Such information for the years after 1984 could not be obtained other than at disproportionate cost.

Since the Insolvency Act 1986 came into force on 29 December 1986 official receivers have been able to ensure that nearly all bankruptcies with sufficient assets to produce a distribution to creditors are administered by private sector insolvency practitioners. Those bankruptcies which remain to be administered by the official receiver as trustee are therefore unlikely to produce such a distribution, any assets realised in such cases being absorbed in payment of the costs of the proceedings.

Cross-Media Ownership

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the outcome of the investigation by the Office of Fair Trading into cross-media ownership; what action he intends to take; and if he will make a statement.

(2) when the Director General for Fair Trading is going to announce the conclusion of his investigations into cross-media ownership.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to the reply, 15 November 1989, c. 281-82]: How media companies promote their interests in media services and products raises questions of standards of behaviour which go wider than those which can be addressed by the Director General of Fair Trading using competition legislation. I have therefore agreed with my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary that there should be an independent inquiry, to be undertaken by John Sadler CBE, which will start work as soon as possible. In view of this the DGFT has decided not to pursue his investigations.

The terms of reference are as follows:

1. To consider to what extent it is proper for media companies to promote their own, or any associate's interests in the provision of media services or products.
2. Where such behaviour is found to be improper and taking into account the effect on the relevant markets to consider what remedies might be appropriate.
3. The provisions of the Broadcasting Bill 1989 are being considered by Parliament and are outside these terms of reference.
4. To report with any recommendations, to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

ENVIRONMENT

Rainfall

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has formed of the rainfall levels required in England and Wales during the coming winter if drought conditions next summer are to be avoided.

Mr. Howard: Recent information suggests that average rainfall over the next five months would restore water resources to near-normal levels for the late spring in most areas of England and Wales. However, the National Rivers Authority estimates that the amount of rainfall required in parts of Yorkshire, the south-east and East Anglia might have to be as much as 50, 40 and 10 per cent. above average respectively. Where necessary, water undertakers are considering contingency measures.

Drinking Water

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water supplies in the north-east contain aluminium in excess of the terms of the European drinking water directive.

Mr. Howard: Eighteen supply zones in the north-east have been notified to the Commission as being subject to a derogation under article 9(1)(a) of the EC drinking water directive in respect of the aluminium standard and hence comply with its requirements. We expect to notify the Commission shortly of a derogation for one further supply zone.

Improvement works are planned to treatment works to remedy failures of the aluminium standard in a further 24 supply zones. Improvements are also being carried out to the distribution system to remove residual aluminium deposits.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department includes the Property Services Agency and the Crown Suppliers. In 1988, a total of 175 contracts were let which were covered by the European Communities (EC) supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000. Of these, 128 were awarded following advertisement in the EC official journal and 47 were considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier. For 1989 no comprehensive figures are yet available.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest readily available information covers 1988-89 when a total of seven accountancy firms were engaged by my Department. Accountancy firms are invited to tender for the provision of advisory services to Departments on the basis of their suitability to provide the relevant advice. In making such appointments consultations are carried out as necessary, and where appropriate in the light of advice given by Treasury on consultancy appointments.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in setting up salaries and terms of negotiating machinery for manual, white collar and senior staff in the nine months since the creation of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Howard: The National Rivers Authority's arrangements for pay negotiation with its employees are entirely a matter for the management of the authority, as an independent body.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times the chairman of the National Rivers Authority has met the recognised trade unions since the National Rivers Authority came into formal existence; and what information he has on the chairman's plans for any future meetings with the trade unions.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 December 1989]: Negotiations with staff—including dealings with trade unions—are a matter for the management of the National Rivers Authority, as an independent body.

Social Services

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the expenditure per capita of population on social services in each shire county in England and Wales for the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The information for English counties is as follows.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those members of the Nature Conservancy Council or members of its advisory committees whose periods of office expire or are to be reviewed at the end of the present financial year.

Mr. Trippier: The members of the Nature Conservancy Council, or its advisory committees, whose periods of office expire on 31 March 1990 are as follows:

European Environment Agency

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff will be employed by the European Environment Agency; and how many will be (a) seconded staff and (b) new recruits.

Mr. Trippier: About 20 professional staff, some of whom will be transferred from the Commission, together with a limited number of support staff will be employed by the European Environment Agency. The precise total numbers, secondments and new recruits have yet to be determined.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the cost of establishing and running the European Environment Agency will be additional spending by the European Commission.

Mr. Trippier: The cost of establishing and running the European Environment Agency in its first year is estimated at 5·5 million ecu, equivalent to about £3·8 million. It is likely that part of this expenditure will be met through transfer of expenditure on existing Community programmes.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the European Environment Agency will have powers to obtain information from companies and individuals.

Mr. Trippier: The European Environment Agency will not have powers to require companies and individuals to provide information.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of homeless people in London currently sleeping rough; and what is his estimate for each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: There are no regular and reliable counts or estimates. The most recent study undertaken for the Salvation Army found 753 people sleeping rough on the streets of 17 London boroughs on one night in April this year. We have no other reliable estimate.

Woolworth Products

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make representations to the management of F. W. Woolworth plc in respect of their product lines Christmas Snow and Silly String, in view of their ozone-depleting properties; if he will take steps to ban the use of ozone-depleting chemicals in non-essential products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that it is the intention of the British aerosol industry that by the end of this year at least 90 per cent. of their products will be CFC free. It is the policy of the Government to phase out all CFC consumption by the end of the century.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish his Department's research on very sheltered housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: With the expected increase of three quarters of a million people over the age of 75 in the next 20 years I am today publishing this report which shows the contribution that can be made by very sheltered housing schemes to the care of frail elderly people in the community.

The report based on research by my Department showed that the vast majority of elderly people liked living in very sheltered schemes which are an enhanced form of sheltered housing with extra wardens, provision of meals and help for residents with domestic and care tasks, and which are currently provided by about one in three local authorities and one in four housing associations.

Caring for an elderly person in very sheltered housing was less expensive than a place in a local authority old people's home and much less expensive than equivalent care in hospital. Very sheltered housing schemes were, however, more costly than comparable care provided in an elderly person's own home and about one in four of those interviewed would have preferred this cheaper option. The schemes also varied considerably in the frailty of the people they catered for, some schemes containing a high proportion of relatively fit elderly people.

The report recommends that future schemes adopt a slightly more flexible approach to caring for residents by making use of visiting care support services provided by social services departments and district health authorities rather than relying entirely on permanent in-house staff. It also suggests that the preferred model for development is for self-contained rather than shared accommodation, with additional communal facilities and with meals available.

Overall, the report concludes that, whilst very sheltered housing can be an attractive alternative to hospital and residential care for most elderly people, it is an expensive resource which should be provided only after careful appraisal of all the factors involved including the wishes of elderly people, stress on carers, and costs. It should also be provided only where there is an adequate level of care and consultation with all the relevant agencies in assessing nominations for places. However, enabling frail elderly people to remain at home must continue to be the first option for those who need and want it.

The Government's White Paper on care in the community, published last month, recognises that suitable housing is an important component of community care, and that social services authorities will need to work closely with providers of housing of all types in developing plans for a full and flexible range of accommodation. Very sheltered housing will form part of the spectrum of care provision which local authorities will be able to call on as they plan services in their areas to cater for a variety of individual needs.

Community Charge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance he has given to local authorities relating to exemptions from the community charge.

Mr. Chope: Yes. Arrangements have been put in hand to do so. A copy of practice note No. 19 "Exemptions from the Personal Community Charge (2)" has already been placed in the Library.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to achieve reductions in United Kingdom levels of emissions of sulphur dioxide.

Mr. Trippier: My Department issued a consultation paper on 31 August this year explaining in detail our proposals for implementing the large combustion plants directive. Such plants are responsible for 85 per cent. of United Kingdom emissions of sulphur dioxide. A copy of the paper is in the Library of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the letter written to the hon. Member for Carmarthen on 5 December by the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier).

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: The text of the letter is as follows:

"I promised to write to you in response to the series of questions you tabled recently on aspects of hazardous waste management. It may be helpful if I respond to them topic by topic.

There are currently four incinerators licensed to deal commercially with special wastes in Britain. I do not, however, have detailed information on the number of large chemical incinerators in the European Community or elsewhere which treat special wastes. I am unable either to provide the information you seek on the design of their furnace door.

Regarding incineration at sea, the disposal of wastes from the UK is licensed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. My Department does not keep records of the amount of special wastes incinerated in the North Sea or in other European waters.

Information on the import of wastes for incineration has been held by my Department only since October 1988 when the relevant provisions of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations came into force. Since then some 8,700 tonnes of imported special waste has been dealt with at the four commercially available incinerators.

Turning to your questions concerning the incinerator operated by ReChem International Ltd. at Ponteg, Pontypool, information on the amount of waste dealt with is not held by my Department. That is a matter for the local waste disposal authority, Torfaen borough council.

The results of the PCB sampling in soils and herbage around the plant undertaken by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution are as follows (all figures in microgrames per kilogram):

	mg/kg
PCBs in herbage:
Range	3·0–19·7
Mean	8·4
Median	6·6
PCBs in soil:
Range	9·0–19·0
Mean	13·5
Median	14·8

I understand that the Inspectorate has also taken samples of soil and herbage for Dioxin analysis. These samples are currently being analysed and I will write again as soon as the results are available.

The latest figures (August 1989) indicate levels of PCB in the flue gas of the incinerator to be considerably less than 0·01 milligrams per cubic metre. The latest figures for Dioxins and Furans are as follows (all in nanograms per cubic metre):

	Nanograms per cu. m.
2,3,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzofuran	0·05
Tetrachlorodibenzofurans (total)	0·12
2,3,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzodioxin	<0·025
Tetrachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	<0·025
Pentachlorodibenzofurans (total)	<0·025
Pentachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	<0·025
Hexachlorodibenzofurans (total)	<0·025
Hexachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	<0·025
Heptachlorodibenzofurans (total)	<0·05
Heptachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	0·05
Octachlorodibenzofuran	<0·025
Octachlorodibenzodioxin	0·05

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution inform me that the emission figures for both PCBs and Dioxins/Furans compare very favourably with those published for similar incinerators in Europe.

I am also informed by the Inspectorate that no equipment is currently available to give instantaneous readings of PCB or Dioxin in flue gas. However continuous sampling is undertaken and samples of flue gas are analysed on a routine basis for PCB and on a more random basis for Dioxin.

Regarding alternative methods to incineration of PCBs, a number of possible processes are under investigation. The most promising appear to be those involving exchange of the chlorine atom or microbiological systems. Neither is, however, likely to prove effective for high concentrations of PCBs for which high temperature incineration is likely to remain the only satisfactory form of disposal.

Figures with respect to the cumulative totals of PCBs manufactured over the last 30 years are not available in the form you asked for them. But from the start of commercial production in 1929 to 1980 some 1,055,000 tonnes of PCBs were produced worldwide, of which 66,800 tonnes were produced in the United Kingdom by Monsanto, Newport. Other major producing countries were the USA (648,000 tonnes), Japan (60,000 tonnes), Spain (25,000 tonnes) and Italy (24,000 tonnes). During 1980-84 only France, West Germany, Italy and Spain within the community continued to manufacture PCBs and after 1984 production continued only in France and Spain. My Department does not hold figures for PCB production after 1980.

My Department does not hold information on the amount of special waste treated by Leigh Environmental using their Sealosafe process, or its current state. That is a matter for the local waste disposal authority, Walsall Metropolitan Borough Council.

Information on the import of flyash through Swansea Docks is also not held centrally. That is a matter for the local waste disposal authority, Swansea District Council. I have no information on the analysis of this flyash for dioxins.'

I hope this is helpful."

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the competitiveness of Property Services Agency design costs.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Until the PSA has commercial accounting systems, any general estimates of the cost competitiveness of its services would be of doubtful value. In any event, with the introduction of competition it would not be appropriate to publish any estimated comparison between PSA's costs and competitors' fees as this would give competitors information which might harm the PSA's market position.

Exhaust Fumes

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which authorities have responsibility for checking the exhaust fumes from buses and other heavy vehicles what powers are available to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The annual tests for buses and heavy goods vehicles conducted by the Department's vehicle inspectorate include a visual check on smoke density. Over the past two years the inspectorate has increased substantially its programme of roadside checks on the condition of goods vehicles. This also includes a check on smoke emissions. Vehicles can be banned or owners required to rectify defects within a specified period.

In addition, the police are responsible for day-to-day enforcement of requirements set by the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations which include controls on vehicle emissions. They can require defects to be rectified within a specified period.

Radioactivity (Sellafield)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been (a) the average level and (b) the greatest reported level of worker exposure to radioactivity at the B-30 pond at Sellafield; and whether the worker exposure levels have ever exceeded legal limits.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

I am informed that average annual external doses to the most exposed group of B30 workers have reduced from 28·3 millisieverts in 1984 to 18·5 millisieverts in 1988. Following the introducton of the Ionising Radiation Regulations in 1986, internal doses have also been assessed. The addition of internal doses in 1988 had the effect of adding 2·5 millisieverts, to give a total average whole body dose of 21 millisieverts in that year.

I have asked the chairman of BNFL to write to the hon. Member on the question of average doses prior to 1984.

Since 1971, the annual statutory limit of 50 millisieverts external dose has been exceeded by two B30 personnel in 1978; one in 1980; and two in 1985. The highest dose received was an annual dose of 86·1 millisieverts in 1980.

War Veterans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities in England and Wales allow a discretionary award for veterans disabled during the second world war or for their widows in the assessment of housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

Local schemes for disregarding war widow's and war disablement pensions in excess of the statutory disregard are entirely at the discretion of the local authority.

The list has been compiled from the best information available to the Department and shows those local authorities that operate a local scheme of this kind. I regret that the information available is insufficiently detailed to restrict the answer only to those schemes aimed particularly at people receiving war pensions arising from the second world war.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many St. Helenians are at present working in the United Kingdom; and what is the nature of their work.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are 104 St. Helenians in Britain on work permits, who are employed in semi-skilled and unskilled jobs, mainly in the hotel and domestic service sectors. In addition, it is estimated that there are between 4,000 and 5,000 people of St. Helenian extraction currently in the United Kingdom, many of whom are second or third generation residents.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present number of unemployed on St. Helena; and what it was (a) one year ago and (b) five years ago.

Mr. Sainsbury: Seventy-one people are presently receiving unemployment benefit in St. Helena. In addition, 105 are working three days per week as part of a community scheme for the unemployed. In 1988 a total of 125 people were working in the latter category. No other figures are available.

NATO

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's current proposals for measures of information exchange at the conventional forces in Europe talks required each party to provide information on the types of each of the main categories of weapon equipment holdings.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. A copy of the proposals of 21 September is being placed in the Library of the House.

Vietnam

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Vietnamese Government concerning the political prisoners detained without trial in prison in Vietnam.

Mr Sainsbury: We have, with our partners in the European Community, raised the question of political prisoners with the Vietnamese authorities. The Twelve have also raised at the United Nations continuing reports of abuses of human rights in Vietnam, and have called on the Vietnamese to release, without delay, those prisoners detained without a fair trial.

Tibet

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Government Ministers last met the Dalai Lama; and what plans they have to meet him to discuss the position in Tibet.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 16 November to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside, (Mr. Parry), at column 498.

West Bank and Gaza Strip

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy with regard to the establishment of a United Nations observer force in the West Bank and Gaza strip.

Mr. Waldegrave: A United Nations observer force in the Occupied Territories might well have a useful role to play if it were acceptable to the parties directly concerned.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tibet

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what type and amount of aid the United Kingdom is currently providing to Tibet.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom is currently providing no aid to Tibet.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what changes Her Majesty's Government have made to their plans to send a representative to Phnom Penh in view of representations from the United States Government;

(2) what representations have been received from the United States Government regarding Her Majesty's Government's intention to send a delegation to Phnom Penh; and what has been Her Majesty's Government's response;

(3) when the recently announced diplomatic mission to Phnom Penh will take place.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government regularly exchange views with the Government of the United States. As indicated by my answer on 23 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) two officials, one from the British embassy in Bangkok and the other from the Overseas Development Administration are currently in Cambodia. The dates of their visit are 8 to 17 December.

THE ARTS

Recording Britain Collection

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received following the decision of the Victoria and Albert museum to call in and store (a) the Recording Britain collection of paintings commissioned in 1939 and (b) the 67 paintings from that collection on public display in Wiltshire; and what will be his response.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 December 1989]: I have received no such representations, but understand that the Victoria and Albert museum has recalled the watercolours currently out on loan in order to ensure their long-term preservation. The paintings will be available for anyone to see on request and the museum will look favourably on requests for loans for specific displays provided the environmental and security conditions are satisfactory.

TRANSPORT

Thornaby Bypass

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to announce (a) the current year's transport supplementary grant determination and (b) his conclusions on the representations made to him by the hon. Member for Stockton, South about the Thornaby bypass.

Mr. Atkins: We plan to announce details of the 1990-91 transport supplementary grant settlement for England within the next few days. All hon. Members will be informed individually of decisions relating to their constituency.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Atkins: The number of contracts awarded by the Department of Transport and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was 35 in the calendar year 1988, and 45 so far in this calendar year. Of these 31 were awarded following advertisement in the EC Journal, and 49 were considered to be exempt from advertising.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether the firms have been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Atkins: The Department is currently taking advice from five accountancy firms on various subjects including financial and management consultancy, audit and information technology. In appointing firms the Department follows Treasury guidelines and consults the Treasury on each individual case, before a commission is awarded. No separate consultation is generally undertaken with the Department of Trade and Industry.

Roads

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department consulted the European Commission regarding the special protection area in the Lee Valley which could be affected by the road proposals in the east London assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the extent of contamination of the exchange land in Wanstead for common land proposed to be taken for the M11 link road; when the assessment was made and with what result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The only exchange land on offer in Wanstead in connection with this scheme is for land which would be taken from Epping forest. An assessment of part of the site was made in 1982 for an earlier road scheme. It showed that the land was suitable for use as public open space.

In response to representations at the current public inquiry the Department's consultants made investigations of the remainder of the site on 22 November last. Their preliminary findings are expected in the next few days. I shall put a copy in the Library.

Berkshire County Council

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what amounts of borrowing approval have been granted to Berkshire county council for highways purposes on each of the last five financial years; and how much was used by the council in each of those years for highways purposes.

Mr. Atkins: The highways capital allocation issued to Berkshire county council in each of the last five financial years represents both borrowing approval and spending power. The latter can be supplemented by the use of capital receipts. Details of actual borrowing are not available; the table compares highways capital allocation with total highways expenditure.

£ million

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what amounts of transport supplementary grant have been allocated to Berkshire county council in each of the last five years; and how much of the allocation was used by Berkshire county council in each of those years.

Mr. Atkins: Transport supplementary grant is paid at a flat rate of 50 per cent. on an accepted programme of named major (over £1 million) schemes and on an undifferentiated block of minor (under £1 million) works. The table compares Berkshire county council's expenditure accepted for grant in each of these categories with the equivalent outturn information.

Airport Security

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will approach Governments of technically advanced countries with proposals to provide sophisticated airport security equipment to developing countries, free of charge or at reduced charge.

Mr. McLoughlin: The provision of sophisticated equipment can be ineffective and wasteful unless the necessary supporting administrative framework is in place. We are assisting developing countries to introduce the organisation, legislation and training to support their own aviation security programmes. We are paying the salaries of two security specialists within the International Civil Aviation Organisation who have the specific task of helping states to do this.

Diesel Multiple Units

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Yorkshire transport authorities concerning the problems caused by shortages of diesel multiple units and maintenance staff; what action is being taken by British Rail to rectify these problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: As it happens, I am meeting the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority today. I understand that BR has taken action including pre-planned cancellations, short formations of some trains and operating some loco-hauled trains. BR is keeping the local passenger transport authorities fully in the picture regarding its problems, plans and solutions.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the British Railway Board's proposals for passenger and freight services through the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The British Railways board has today published the plan which it is required to prepare under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987. This plan sets out the board's current proposals for commercially viable passenger, freight and parcels services through the Channel tunnel serving various parts of the United Kingdom.

In addition to the board's proposals for passenger services between London and Paris and between London and Brussels, the plan includes proposals for a number of direct through services between destinations beyond London and mainland Europe providing over 3 million seats a year. The amount of traffic that will be attracted to such services is difficult to judge exactly before the Channel tunnel opens, and the board's proposals are intended to test the market for them. The initial service level may be expanded if the actual traffic exceeds expectations. If on the other hand the actual traffic level is insufficient to justify some of the services proposed, the board will need to reconsider the case for continuing to provide them. I am, however, optimistic that passengers will be keen to take advantage of this exciting new opportunity to travel directly between the regions and mainland Europe without having to change trains in London.

The plan also sets out the board's current proposals for freight and parcels services. I have asked the board to consider how they might improve the financial performance of their non-bulk freight sector to maximise the involvement of the private sector, and to reshape the business to seize the new opportunities presented by the Channel tunnel. I expect the board's proposals to develop, as their non-bulk strategy develops. Over 70 per cent. of the forecast rail freight traffic through the Channel tunnel will begin or end its journey beyond London, and the board's freight proposals reflect this emphasis. The detailed pattern of services is still under discussion with the board's freight customers and with potential private sector partners, but it is clear that the board's plans are based on the operation of fast through freight services between the United Kingdom regions and mainland Europe. These services will transform the opportunities available to United Kingdom manufacturers and traders for sending their goods through to the rest of Europe. Goods from Scotland and the north of England will be able to reach some continental destinations within 24 hours, and more distant places such as Munich and Milan within 48 hours, compared with the current transit time by road and ferry of at least 72 hours.

British Rail announced on 3 November that it had selected Eurorail, comprising Trafalgar House and BICC, as its preferred partner in a joint venture for Channel tunnel rail services. In addition to operation of the initial pattern of rail services through the tunnel, the joint venture will be responsible for constructing a new rail link between London and the tunnel; there is already a very high standard of rail infrastructure on the lines beyond London. Through services between the United Kingdom regions and mainland Europe are not, however, dependent on the construction of the new link. The proposals set out by British Rail in its plans are intended to come into effect as soon as the tunnel opens, and British Rail is confident that its existing network will have sufficient capacity for the additional Channel tunnel traffic for a number of years before the new link is needed.

I welcome the publication of this plan, which sets out clearly British Rail's proposals for making the most of the opportunities offered by the tunnel. Others will now want to express their views on the proposals put forward. The plan can do no more than set out British Rail's current view of the opportunities, and I have no doubt that British Rail will continue to develop its plans, both during the period up to the opening of the tunnel and thereafter, as the pattern of demand and the associated commercial opportunities become clearer.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 December 1989]: In the 12 months ended November 1989, a total of 79 market research and/or sample surveys were carried out by or for the Department of Transport. The total cost of this work was £2·7 million.

Of the 79 surveys, 12 were carried out in house and 67 were undertaken by outside organisations. The total cost of surveys contracted out was £2·5 million, or 93 per cent. of the cost of all such work.

PRIME MINISTER

Soviet Union

Q51. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister: I expect to visit the Soviet Union next June for talks with Mr. Gorbachev and to support the 'Britain in Kiev' exhibition.

Eastern Europe

Q112. Mr. Andrew Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on recent developments in eastern Europe.

The Prime Minister: We greatly welcome current developments in Poland, Hungary, the German Democratic Republic and Czechoslovakia which are moving towards democracy and freedom. We are also closely watching developments in Bulgaria and hope that they will lead in the same direction. We are taking many practical steps to help this process and are prepared to do more.

European Council

Q138. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the President of the European Council; and what matters she proposes to raise.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to meet President Mitterrand again before the end of the French presidency of the EC.

Field Sports

Q151. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister if she will co-ordinate Government action to introduce legislation to make hare-coursing, stag and deer hunting, fox hunting and beagling illegal.

The Prime Minister: No. Field sports are a matter for the decision of the individual.

North Sea

Q165. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to stop industrial waste dumping in the North sea, by 31 December, in line with its written declaration at the second ministerial conference on the protection of the North sea in 1987; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is fully meeting international agreements reached unanimously by the North sea countries. Ministers at the second North sea conference agreed that disposal at sea of industrial wastes should not be prohibited if there were no practical alternative means of disposal on land and if it could be shown to the Oslo commission that the materials caused no harm in the marine environment. The Oslo commission in 1989 agreed the procedure by which a country would show that a waste met these criteria.

No deadline has been set internationally for termination of sea disposal. However, the Government are seeking to end sea disposal of these wastes at the earliest possible time. Of the 20 licences issued in 1987 for disposal of liquid industrial waste at sea more than half will not be renewed next year. The remainder will be terminated as soon as environmentally acceptable alternative means of disposal have been identified and implemented. The Oslo commission agreed earlier this year that even when an alternative disposal option is identified a transitional period will be needed before sea disposal can end, to give time for introduction of the alternative arrangements.

Homelessness

Q180. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if, over Christmas, she will visit those sleeping rough in the parks and streets of London.

The Prime Minister: Homelessness is a major concern to us all. The Government's hostel initiative has produced 21,000 hostel bedspaces since 1981; and some of the special £250 million homelessness package announced on 15 November will directly help vulnerable single people at risk of becoming roofless.

Clydesdale

Q201. Mr. Hood: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit Clydesdale; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list, for each of the countries of the Warsaw pact what technical and administrative assistance Her Majesty's Government are making available or can offer to assist the conduct of free general elections.

The Prime Minister: Help to prepare for fully democratic elections is a central objective of the know-how Funds for Poland and Hungary. Hungarian and Polish parliamentarians have visited Britain to study democratic procedures. We are also helping with local government training. We hope that other eastern European countries will qualify for such help in due course.

British Aerospace (Rover Deal)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister on what date and at what time she was made aware of the sweeteners being offered to British Aerospace on the Rover deal.

The Prime Minister: I was kept aware throughout of the progress of the negotiations with British Aerospace and was of course aware of the basic terms and conditions of the agreements reached with British Aerospace. This major privatisation has provided an excellent return for the United Kingdom taxpayer, for the Rover work force and dealer network and for the company's customers.

Korea

Mr. Sims: To ask the Prime Minister what representation she made to the President of Korea on his recent visit about the level of duties and taxes on Scotch whisky in Korea; and what further steps Her Majesty's Government plan to take in this matter.

The Prime Minister: I made representations to the Korean President during his visit at the end of November about the discriminatory features of Korea's tax and tariff treatment of Scotch whisky and other imported spirits, as well as other restrictions on the import and distribution of these products. There has been some liberalisation which has benefited Scotch whisky but discriminatory treatment continues to hold back sales in Korea. The Government will continue to take every opportunity, both bilaterally and through the European Community, to persuade Korea to take the necessary actions.

Angola

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister whether the subject of Angolan unity came up in her recent conversations with President Bush; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I did not discuss Angolan unity with President Bush. The Government have consistently stressed the need for a political settlement in Angola. We support President Mobutu's work as mediator and trust that this will lead to an early end to the fighting and to negotiations without pre-conditions between the MPLA Government of Angola and UNITA.

Friends of the Earth

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met the director of Friends of the Earth (UK); for how long they met; what issues were discussed; and what plans she has to meet other non-governmental organisation environmentalists.

The Prime Minister: I met Mr. Jonathon Porritt, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, on 1 December when we discussed a number of environmental issues of mutual concern. I meet representatives of other environmental groups from time to time.

Correspondence

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister why Mr. Dennis Griffiths, of 25 Grant road, Stoke, Coventry, has not yet received a substantive reply to his letter of 24 June, following her acknowledgement of its receipt; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I receive an enormous number of letters each week from Members of Parliament and members of the public. It is not possible for me to deal with all these letters personally and I must accordingly refer most of them to the Minister and the Department with the responsibility for the policy in question.

Mr. Griffiths' letter of 26 June was sent an acknowledgement on 20 July and the letter was passed that day to the Department of Social Security for further action. I understand that a response was sent by the Department of Social Security on 13 December 1989. I very much regret the long delay.

Environmental Co-operation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on the need for Europwide environmental co-operation.

The Prime Minister: I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment are in regular contact with our European counterparts and play an active part in developing constructive Europewide co-operation on a broad range of environmental matters.

At the Environment Council on 28 November we supported the creation of a European Environment Agency to improve the quality of environmental information across Europe. The agency will be established initially on a European Community basis, but will subsequently be open to wider European participation.

The United Kingdom is playing an active role in preparations for the ministerial conference on sustainable development to be held in Bergen in May 1990 under the auspices of the United Nations Commission for Europe and we hosted an international preparatory workshop in 24 to 26 September.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Transport chaired the special session of the European conference of Ministers of Transport on 23 November, at which Ministers agreed on the need for environmentally sustainable transport policies.

Engagements

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening a reception will be held at No. 10 Downing street on behalf of the Royal National Institute for the Blind.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Stock Exchange

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what position the London stock exchange held in the international league of trading volumes in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

On the basis of total turnover in equities and fixed interest stocks the International Stock Exchange of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland Limited ranked third in 1987 and second in 1988. It was also the third largest exchange in terms of market capitalisation of domestic equities in both 1987 and 1988.

WALES

Ambulance Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet ambulance workers based at the Queensferry station to discuss their views concerning their salary levels and their claims for arbitration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I had the opportunity to meet trade union representatives of Clwyd ambulance workers at Colwyn Bay on Friday 8 December and their views were fully put to me. The only sensible way forward in the current pay dispute is for the unions to call off their action and resume talks with the management side of the Whitley council.

Water Quality

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his reply of 5 December, he will list the names and locations of the 89 of Dwr Cymru's water treatment works for which a relaxation of standards under the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 has been granted relating to the level of permissible aluminium.

Mr. Grist: The information in respect of the 34 relaxations granted under sections 4(1)(c) and 4(2) of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 for Dwr Cymru treatment works/sources is shown in the table.

In respect of the information regarding the undertakings accepted under section 20(5)(b) of the Water Act 1989, I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer of 16 November to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones).

Rural Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions have taken place between his Department and the Welsh Development Agency concerning the implementation of his new rural initiative programme in those rural areas of Wales which lie outside the jurisdiction of Mid-Wales Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department and the agency regularly discuss matters of mutual interest including rural affairs.

Local Authority Capital Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total for local authority capital expenditure in 1990-91 and for 1989-90; what is that increase as a percentage in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: As I announced on 29 November, my proposals assume gross spending in 1990-91 of £475 million. This represents an increase of 6·9 per cent. over the 1989-90 equivalent (£444 million). The relevant GDP deflator is 5 per cent. Further resources will be provided if expenditure on mandatory home renovation grants exceeds the £75 million I have allowed for it.

Development Bodies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to realise the property assets of (a) the Mid-Wales Development Board and (b) the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since their inception, property assets have been sold by the two development agencies the proceeds of which have contributed to the massive increase in their gross expenditure in recent years. This will continue.

Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the details of his award of finance to support the A548 Dee crossing for which funding has been set; what are the amounts per year; what is the starting date and the proposed completion date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on Thursday 7 December. Support for the years beyond 1990-91 will be considered in future annual transport grant settlements and in the light of progress on the scheme. The timing of construction is a matter for Clwyd county council.

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many (a) primary and (b) high school teachers in Clwyd, in numbers and as a percentage, receive incentive allowances; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the percentage in each of the local education authorities of Wales of teachers receiving incentive allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The latest information relates to March 1988 and is shown in the table.

Teachers receiving incentive allowances

	Number	Percentage
Clwyd—
Primary/Nursery	243	25·6
Secondary	932	53·5
All Teachers[1]

Powys	—	33·1
South Glamorgan	—	38·1
West Glamorgan	—	38·4

[1] All teachers includes teachers in Special schools, and excludes Headteachers and Deputy Headteachers.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he intends to take to eliminate the shortage of primary school teachers in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government's role is to ensure that sufficient qualified teachers are available to meet employers' needs. It is the responsibility of local education authorities to ensure that teachers are recruited to meet the needs of schools in their areas. In responding to the survey of teaching vacancies in September this year, Clwyd did not indicate that there was a shortage of primary teachers in the county.

This year the intake of students to primary courses in initial teacher training institutions was over 15 per cent. higher than in 1988. In Welsh institutions the increase was 22 per cent. above the 1988 figure and 28 per cent. above the targets for those institutions. We have also invited bids from LEAs in Wales for education support grant to assist with the cost of developing schemes of recruitment directed at meeting local shortages. No bid has been received from Clwyd.

Schools (First Aid)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will meet St. John Ambulance and the Red Cross in Wales to discuss the place of first aid instruction in schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) which local education authorities in Wales have arranged for first aid instruction in their schools; what type of instruction is provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Any discussions about the place of first aid instruction in schools should most appropriately be conducted between the first aid organisations and local education authorities.

All local education authorities make provision for first aid instruction. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with detailed information on the extent of provision and type of instruction in schools and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

"Trade Routes to the Future"

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is planning to take with reference to the recent Confederation of British Industry report, "Trade Routes to the Future", as it affects Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I wrote to the CBI on 4 December. A copy of my letter has been placed in the House of Commons Library. Since then I have announced plans to dualling the A5 across Anglesey, one of the routes identified in the report as in need of improvement.

Doctors

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many doctors whose basic medical training and qualifications were received abroad are employed as general practitioners in Wales in 1989; and what was the comparable figure for each of the past five years;

(2) how many doctors whose training and basic medical qualifications were received outside the United Kingdom are employed as general practitioners in each family practitioner committee area in Wales; and what was the comparable figure for each of the past five years;

(3) what percentage of general practitioners in each family practitioner committee area in Wales received their basic training and qualifications outside the United Kingdom; and what was the equivalent percentage for each of the past five years;

(4) what percentage of general practitioners in Wales received their basic medical training and qualifications outside the United Kingdom; and what was the comparable figure for each of the past five years.

Mr. Grist: Information on where general practitioners received basic medical training is not held centrally. However the latest available information on country of birth is shown in the table which will show the hon. Gentleman that the position for Wales in 1989 was almost identical to that in 1983.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many doctors whose training and basic medical qualification were received outside the United Kingdom are employed in hospitals in Wales in 1989; and what was the comparable figure for each of the past five years;

(2) what percentage of hospital doctors in each health authority area in Wales received their basic medical training and qualification outside the United Kingdom; and what was the comparable percentage for each of the past five years.

Mr. Grist: Information on where hospital doctors received basic medical training is not held centrally. However available information on country of birth is shown in the table:

Hospital doctors born outside the United Kingdom[1]

Year	Number	Per cent.
1984[2]	833	32·5
1985[2]	854	32·6
1986[2]	863	32·1
1987	850	31·2
1988	841	30·2

[1] Staff in post as at 30 September.

[2] Excludes doctors born in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the hours worked by junior hospital doctors in Wales;

(2) what assessment he has made of the level of morale among junior hospital doctors in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Information is not held centrally about hours worked by junior hospital doctors. Information held relates to the number of units of medical time (UMT) for which doctors are contracted. Earlier this year the Department undertook a review. The Department has since requested health authorities to submit proposals to reduce further the hours worked by junior doctors. No assessment of the level of morale among junior doctors as such has been undertaken.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the number of individuals who have received their medical training and qualification outside the United Kingdom and who will have to be recruited by hospitals in Wales in each of the coming five years;

(2) what assessment he has made of the problems of recruiting and retaining the services of junior hospital doctors to posts at hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Grist: It is not possible reliably to assess the demand for overseas qualified doctors in each of the next five years. Consideration is still being given to the distribution by specialty of those doctors eligible to pursue a career in the United Kingdom and those overseas doctors who are seeking to undertake training for a limited period in the United Kingdom. The implementation of the package of proposals in "Achieving a Balance" for the reform of the hospital medical staffing structure will alleviate recruitment problems and the Department, with the assistance of the recently established Welsh Council for Postgraduates in Medical and Dental Education, is developing plans for a training package specifically for overseas doctors employed in Wales. This scheme and other initiatives under consideration are designed to attract junior doctors to the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what examination he has undertaken of the effectiveness of induction and supplementary training given immediately on appointment to any doctor whose medical training and qualifications have been received outside the United Kingdom;

(2) what examination he has undertaken of the effectiveness of inquiries made prior to the employment in any hospital in Wales of a doctor whose medical training and qualifications have been received outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Grist: The Department has issued firm guidance to health authorities in Wales on the procedures to be followed in employing overseas qualified doctors and in particular emphasised the importance of checking that doctors are properly registered for the work they are to do before taking up employment.

Overseas qualified doctors applying for registration must satisfy the General Medical Council about their professional experience, clinical knowledge/skills and their command and understanding of the English language. The Department is satisfied with the criteria employed by the General Medical Council to assess the suitability of overseas qualified doctors. All such doctors work under the direct supervision of a consultant who provides further training as appropriate.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what percentage of hospital doctors in Wales received their basic medical training and qualification outside the United Kingdom; and what was the comparable percentage for each of the past five years;

(2) how many doctors whose training and basic medical qualifications were received outside the United Kingdom are employed in hospitals in each health authority in Wales; and what were the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: Information on where hospital doctors received basic medical training is not held centrally. However, information is available on place of birth and I will reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as the information by health authority can be extracted.

ENERGY

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the long-term safety reviews of the Magnox reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is an ongoing programme of long-term safety reviews of Magnox stations. This will be continued by Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the maximum operating life of Magnox reactors; if he will take steps to require the Central Electricity Generating Board to set a maximum operational period for the reactors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The maximum operating life of a Magnox station is a matter for the owner of the station subject to the requirements of the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of the decommissioning costs for the Magnox reactors pertains to (a) phase one, (b) phase two and (c) phase three.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Magnox operators.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress being made to fit flue gas desulphurisation equipment to power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The retrofitting of flue gas desulphurisation equipment to the 4,000 MW coal-fired power station at Drax in Yorkshire is proceeding satisfactorily. The electricity industry is identifying subsequent stations for retrofits.

CEGB (Safety Breaches)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received over the amount of fines imposed on the Central Electricity Generating Board after pleading guilty to charges of nuclear safety breaches brought by the nuclear installations inspectorate whether this was the first such prosecution and conviction of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received no such representations. This is the first occasion on which the Central Electricity Generating Board has been prosecuted by the Health and Safety Executive in respect of breaches of their licence conditions.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list (i) the statutory requirements governing the publication of reports of the constituent bodies of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales (ii) the dates on which such reports have been published in each year since nationalisation, either for existing or predecessor corporations and (iii) indicate, where appropriate, when the reports for 1988-89 will be published.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The statutory requirement governing the publication of reports of the constituent bodies of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales are: the Electricity Act 1947, as amended by the Electricity Act 1957, section 46; and the Electricity Act 1957, sections 10 and 11. These reports have been published each year and have been placed in the Library of the House.

All area boards have published their reports and accounts for 1988-89 and I understand that the Central Electricity Generating Board and the Electricity Council intend to publish their reports and accounts before the end of December.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy under the regulations for the forthcoming privatisation of electricity, what plans he has to give powers to a regulatory body to ensure that the electricity board must legally give customers every opportunity to pay according to their means.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under their licences, public electricity suppliers will implement approved procedures for dealing with customers facing difficulties with their bills which will include taking particular account of the consumer's ability to pay. These procedures can be enforced by the director under section 25 of the Electricity Act 1989.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what regulations are in force in relation to secondary means of evacuation from offshore oil and gas installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Offshore Installations (Construction and Survey) Regulations 1974 (SI 1974/289), the Offshore Installations (Emergency Procedures) Regulations 1976 (SI 1976/1542) and the Offshore Installations (Life-saving Appliances) Regulations 1977 (SI 1977/486).

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what tests are undertaken by his Department, independent of the oil industry, in assessing the safety, quality and effectiveness of all means of evacuation from offshore oil and gas installations generally, and in relation to individual installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department utilises the experience of the marine surveyors of the Department of Transport to ensure that all life-saving appliances are of an approved type, are suitably located, properly maintained and in good working order. Certifying authorities also carry out independent surveys of offshore installations and their equipment, including escape routes. In addition, independent contractors undertake research and development projects sponsored by my Department.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals to introduce regulations or guidance in relation to the provision of smoke hoods on offshore oil and gas installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A research and development programme has been commissioned jointly by my Department and the oil and gas industry to establish performance specifications for smoke hoods to be used offshore and for a test procedure for assessment purposes. Subject to the outcome of this programme, consideration will be given to the introduction of a statutory requirement for the provision of smoke hoods or other devices capable of performing the same or a similar function.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the sources of information underlying the figures in his departmental press release No. 180, issued on 5 December, on imports and exports to the nearest kilogramme of separated and unseparated plutonium.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The figures on imports and exports of plutonium were compiled from data supplied by British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy why, in note 4 to paragraph 1(A) of his departmental press release number 180 on plutonium figures the percentages cited have been rounded to the nearest 5 per cent.; and whether his Department possesses data to a greater degree of accuracy than this.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The estimates of fissile content are shown to the same precision as in the estimates given by the electricity boards to my Department.

Nuclear Plants

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had any recent communications from the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc concerning its plans to make a planning application for the construction of new commercial scale nuclear plants at its sites at Sellafield and Chapelcross.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc on 16 November when their discussion touched upon the feasibility study that the company is carrying out into the options for replacing its stations at Calder Hall and Chapelcross.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to require British Nuclear Fuels plc to inform customers what percentage of the price charged for services relates to the need to reduce environmental impact.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. This is a commercial matter between BNFL and its customers.

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what measures he is taking to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide from energy sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department's current policies include encouragement of cost-effective energy efficiency, the development of renewable energy resources and support for diversified and efficient electricity supply options provide a firm basis for any future action. The need for further measures will be considered in the light of the report of the intergovernmental panel on climate change (IPCC), due in autumn 1990.

Onshore Licensing

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make an announcement on the results of the third onshore licensing round.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have today announced the conditional award of 22 landward exploration licences for blocks in England, Scotland and Wales. The licences allow companies to search and drill for petroleum, subject to the procedures of the planning system and the technical approval of my Department. Where the licences extend into coastal waters stringent conditions will be set to ensure that local interests will be fully taken into account before operations are undertaken.

Details of the awards have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he has any proposals to introduce regulations or guidance relating to the installation of free-fall lifeboats on offshore oil and gas installations;

(2) whether he has any proposals to introduce regulations or guidance in relation to the provision of the secondary evacuation equipment known as skyscape on offshore oil and gas installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In August 1989 my Department issued a statement of intent which included proposals to amend the Offshore Installations (Life-saving Appliances) Regulations 1976 to allow for the use of any approved method of launching lifeboats, including free-fall lifeboats.

The skyscape system has been accepted by the Department of Transport as a suitable means of escape to the sea and is being considered by a number of operators for use on new installations. The statement of intent proposes that there should be more specific guidance on means and location of descent to the sea.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions there are on the award of (a) entry visas and (b) residence permits for citizens of the German Democratic Republic wishing to settle in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All citizens of the German Democratic Republic require visas to enter the United Kingdom for any purpose. Visas are issued in accordance with the immigration rules set out in House of Commons paper 388.

Tobacco and Alcohol

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply on 4 December to the hon. Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill), if he will give a regional breakdown of the figures for prosecutions for illegal sales of tobacco and alcohol, respectively, to children.

Mr. John Patten: Information held centrally on the number of prosecutions against the illegal sale of tobacco and alcohol to children by police force area in England and Wales for 1984 to 1988 is given in the table.

Pornography

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 192, what are (a) the terms of reference of the review, (b) the names of those he will charge with conducting the review, (c) the expected commencement and finishing dates of the review into the possible link between pornography and sexual violence towards women and children; and whether he will allow public representations to be made to the review.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office research and planning unit is at present drawing up the specification for a review of research reports on possible links between pornography and sexual violence. Broadly, the terms of reference will be to review the available research in this country, the United States of America and in other European countries on the effects of pornography, including any link with violence or sexual aggression, and effects on attitudes to women.

We are considering who is best qualified to carry out the review. We plan that it should begin in January and be completed in April. The report would be published in the usual way.

It would not be right to ask the researchers to accept public representations, which would fall outside their terms of reference. We are always ready to consider representations ourselves.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the present financial year to date; and how many of these were automatically renewed or advertised throughout the European Economic Community.

Mr. Waddington: This information is readily available only by calendar year. The number of contracts awarded by my Department covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000 was 71 in 1988 and 56 to date in 1989. Of these, 112 were awarded following advertisement in the EC Journal and 15 were considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier.

Immigration Service (Vacancies)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many employee vacancies there are currently at (a) Lunar house, Croydon and (b) the nationality department at Liverpool.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At 7 December there was an overall total of 85 vacancies in the immigration and nationality department in Croydon, and four in the Immigration and Nationality Department's Liverpool nationality office.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate an inquiry into levels of stress on police now engaged in ambulance work and its effects on their future efficiency as police officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the cost in police time and resources, for each police authority area, of the ambulance dispute since September.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information is that up to 8 December police forces had provided about the number of man hours shown in the table in assisting the ambulance service in their areas.

Approximate number of man hours

	Number
West Midlands	8,200
Bedfordshire	5,900
Lincolnshire	1,500
Dorset	650
Derbyshire	6,800
Hampshire	3,500

	Number
Hertfordshire	12,200
South Yorkshire	4,400
West Yorkshire	570
Warwickshire	460
Surrey	450

For the Metropolitan police district I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given him today in reply to another question.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of police, per day, by Metropolitan police division, employed on ambulance duties since September.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that in the Metropolitan police district from 8 November to 12 December the approximate number of police officers by area employed on duties assisting the ambulance service in each 24-hour period has been as follows:

Approximate number of officers

Area	Number
2	44
3	64
4	40
5	60
6	72
7	74
TOTAL	460

On each of 23 and 24 October the total was about 670 and on 7 November the total was about 830.

IRA Prisoners

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convicted members of the Irish Republican Army currently held in British prisons enjoy category B status apart from the six men convicted after the Birmingham pub bombings;

(2) how many Irish Republican Army members currently serving sentences of life imprisonment enjoy category B status apart from the six men convicted after the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mellor: There are at present in prisons in England and Wales 37 prisoners convicted of terrorist offences believed to have been carried out by the IRA. Twenty-four are serving life sentences, one (excluding the Birmingham Six) not being in category A.

Remission

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the effect on the prison population for (a) those with prison sentences and (b) those on parole in England and Wales, as a result of his proposals for the removal of remission in (i) 1990, (ii) 1991 and (iii) 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The removal of remission is one of a number of changes which we have in mind. Any estimates of the effect on the prison population should take account of all the proposed changes and will be announced in due course.

Emergency Services (Pay)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list at 1989 prices the pay of (a) a leading fireman and (b) a police constable for each year since 1974.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not held in the form requested. The annual rates of pay at historic prices are as follows:

Between October 1974 and October 1989 the retail prices index increased by 309·4 per cent.

Emergency Centres

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will identify those home defence sub-regions currently without a Government wartime emergency centre.

Mr. John Patten: Such centres are not available in regions 8.1 and 10.1.

Nuclear Blast Simulation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will identify those nuclear blast simulations in the United States of America since 1980 with which his Department's scientific research and development branch has been associated; and what was the cost in each case and what arrangements are being made for future collaboration.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is as follows:

Year and Name of trial	Cost of United Kingdom involvement (excluding staff) £	Staff costs £
1981 Mill Race	20,000	[1]—
1983 Direct Course	176,648	57,021

1987 Misty Picture	470,510	68,649
1989 Misers Gold	[2]390,000	78,780

[1] Staff costs not separately available.

[2] Estimate.

No decision has been taken on participation in further such simulations.

Emergency Communications Network

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about (a) the susceptibility to nuclear electromagnetic pulse and (b) any softwear problems of the solid-state message switch devices currently being introduced into the wartime Government emergency communications network.

Mr. John Patten: The equipment underwent satisfactory susceptibility tests prior to purchase. The need for software improvements was identified following initial operational experience of the equipment, and revisions were introduced in 1988. Consideration is being given to the need for any additional refinements in the light of further experience.

Civil Defence

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the proposed criteria for suitability of civil defence volunteers drawn up by the London fire and civil defence authority.

Mr. John Patten: This is entirely a matter for the London fire and civil defence authority.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the all-hazards approach to planning will involve civil defence community volunteers in civil emergencies.

Mr. John Patten: The use of civil defence community volunteers is a matter for individual local authorities to determine. We are aware that some local authorities have involved such volunteers in their response to recent civil emergencies.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the London fire and civil defence authority has co-operated in providing his Department with information about London boroughs' civil defence expenditure.

Mr. John Patten: Yes.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what national voluntary organisations are being considered for the recruitment of civil defence volunteers; and if he will make a statement:

(2) which national voluntary organisations have been contacted by his Department during the past 12 months on the matter of civil defence community volunteers.

Mr. Waddington: The involvement of national voluntary organisations in assisting local authorities with their community volunteer schemes is one of the options we are considering as part of a wider review of the role and organisation of civil defence community volunteers. No decisions on future policy have yet been taken. A discussion paper examining the options was circulated to interested parties earlier this year. The national voluntary organisations formally consulted were the Women's Royal Voluntary Service; British Red Cross; St. John Ambulance Brigade; and Civil Aid.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether details of advances of civil defence grant aid for the London boroughs have been contained in returns made by the London fire and civil defence authority for the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No such details are required in returns made to the Home Office by the London fire and civil defence authority. Advance payments in connection with civil defence grant are decided in the light of estimates of qualifying expenditure submitted by local authorities. Such advances are made to county councils and fire and civil defence authorities rather than to individual boroughs and districts.

Bruntington Airport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the decision was made to transfer the bulk of the emergency fire service vehicles to Bruntington airport; and to which company any maintenance contract for the vehicles has been awarded.

Mr. John Patten: It is Government policy that appropriate services which have hitherto been undertaken in-house should be market-tested. In the light of considerations of effectiveness, efficiency and cost, and subject to satisfactory contracts, it is intended to transfer the storage and maintenance of the emergency fire service equipment to the private sector. Such contracts are still under negotiation, but a limited instruction has been given to TNT Express (UK) Limited to maintain a proportion of the equipment as an interim arrangement.

West Midlands Police

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the chief constable of the West Midlands for a report on what date and in what circumstances Detective Inspector Paul Matthews left the force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable that Inspector Matthews was required to resign from the force on 23 September 1986 following formal discipline proceedings. The officer had been found guilty of failing to obey lawful orders.

Prison Visitors' Centres

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the provision of prison visitors' centres.

Mr. Mellor: We believe that visitors' centres can be of considerable benefit to visitors, prisoners and staff. They are now a standard feature in the design of new establishments. Unfortunately, it is not possible to provide funds to erect purpose-built centres at those existing establishments which do not already have a centre. We are keen, however, to encourage establishments to make suitable provision wherever this is possible—for example, by making use of existing accommodation. I am placing in the Library a copy of a note, "Visitors' Centres: Some Guidelines for Establishments and Voluntary Organisations", which is being issued to the governors of all establishments.

We already make a regular contribution towards the running costs of five visitors' centres and emergency grants have also been made to a further four centres in this financial year. From April next year additional funds will be available to offer similar support to new centres.

Football Safety

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to ask for a report on crowd safety at the Middlesbrough v. Leeds United game on Saturday 9 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware of this incident which led to a number of spectators sustaining minor injuries and the chief constable has been asked for a report. We have also sought information from the Cleveland county council which is responsible for the ground's safety certificate. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Interview Expenses

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will extend the arrangements for interview expenses to be claimed for travel to local interviews.

Mr. Eggar: I have currently no plans to make further changes in the rules of the scheme.

Disabled Adults

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish his Department's internal review on employment assistance to disabled adults.

Mr. Eggar: The review is at an advanced stage. The consultative document which will follow the review will be published as soon as possible.

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he plans to raise the grant ceilings available to sheltered placement scheme sponsors.

Mr. Eggar: I shall be informing sponsors as soon as possible about arrangements for the sheltered placement scheme grant ceiling levels for 1990-91.

European Social Fund

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how much of the European social fund grants for 1990 in Great Britain is being allocated to the Training Agency; and for what purposes;

(2) what is the sum of European social fund grants for 1990; and what percentage is going to the voluntary sector.

Mr. Eggar: The European Commission has not yet informed us how much support it is going to make available for any programmes in 1990.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the European social fund for projects in Great Britain has gone to the voluntary sector programme in the past five years.

Mr. Eggar: The European social fund allocations to voluntary sector applicants for years 1987 to 1989 inclusive are listed in the following table. These figures relate to organisations registered as charities or as companies limited by guarantees; and are expressed as a percentage of the total allocation to Great Britain rounded to the nearest £ million.

Year	Percentage
1987	4·11
1988	5·76
1989	6·11

The figures for the earlier years can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement of the Government's policy towards fighting AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As we made clear in our response to the seventh report of the Social Services Committee on AIDS, published on 24 November (Cm. 925), the Government remain committed to encouraging effective and responsible action among statutory and voluntary bodies and individuals to stem the spread of HIV; foster research to improve our understanding of AIDS and HIV infection: provide appropriate services for those affected by HIV and encourage a climate of understanding and compassion towards them; and to contribute to the international effort to control HIV and AIDS.

Dental Fillings

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out on the possible toxic effect of mercury amalgam fillings currently used on dental patients in the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: In 1986, the Committee on Toxicity examined the available evidence on the risks and benefits of using dental amalgam. It found that there was some evidence that mercury is released from dental amalgam during the period following insertion and on removal of the restorations. However, it also found that long-term clinical evidence would seem to suggest the view that substantial amounts of mercury are not released from amalgam fillings. The committee stated that in its opinion the use of dental amalgam is free from risk of systematic toxicity and only a very few cases of hypersensitivity occur. In its view further research in this area would not merit priority.

Miscarriages

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pregnant mothers suffered miscarriages in the last year for which figures available; and how many of these had received the amniocentesis test during pregnancy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Cummings: To ask Secretary of State for Health which hospitals and services in the northern region have expressed a wish to become self-governing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 29 November at columns 297-300.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list the outstanding applications for a licence before the Medicines Control Agency; and how long each application has been awaiting approval.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are unable to list the outstanding licence applications held by the Medicines Control Agency because this information is, in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968, treated as confidential.

We can however say that the number of applications for new licences awaiting a decision as at 30 November 1989 was:

	Number
Product licences	1,766
Product licences (parallel imports)	1,006
Manufacturers licences	21
Wholesale dealers licences	32
Non orthodox practitioner licences	3

The average time taken* to grant product licences and product licences (parallel imports) as at 30 June 1989 (latest available figure) was:

	Months
for new active substances	24
for abridged applications referred to Committees under the Medicines Act	32 for other abridged applications	16
for parallel imports	19

	Days
for manufacturers licences	80-90
for wholesale dealers licences	80-90
for non orthodox practitioner licences	40

Note:

It should be noted that all times quoted are gross processing times and take no account of delays while companies prepare their replies to queries raised on applications.

Drug Tariff Committee

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list the products at present before the drug tariff committee; and how long each product has been awaiting approval.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no drug tariff committee. Drugs and medicines are automatically included in the drug tariff, subject to any licensing requirements, unless they are specifically excluded from NHS prescription by general practitioners by virtue of the selected list scheme. The inclusion in the drug tariff of appliances, dressings and chemical reagents is subject to their approval by the Secretary of State.

Currently there are about 50 products on which suppliers are awaiting a response from the Department. The earliest application on which a response is still outstanding was received on 3 May 1989. Details of the products under consideration are commercially confidential.

NHS Patients (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients admitted to Leeds Western and Eastern area health authorities for National Health Service treatment had previously received (a) diagnosis and (b) treatment privately for the same or allied ailments.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of the health authorities to see if they can provide the information he requires.

Eye Test Charges

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has had any representations from opticians concerning the introduction of eye test charges since 1 April.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations from opticians since the introduction of charges for sight tests on 1 April this year.

General Practitioners

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grants are (a) currently available or (b) proposed for the future to extend or refurbish general practitioners' surgeries and waiting rooms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The two main types of grant which are currently available to general practitioners who improve their practice premises are cost rents and improvement grants. Both schemes are set to continue in future with certain improvements, in particular to enable family practitioner committees to target new investment on areas of greatest need.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the pay levels for nurses and other health staff returning to the National Health Service after a period of employment in the private health sector.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The pay of NHS staff generally is determined either following the advice of the pay review bodies, or through direct negotiation in the Whitley councils. Arrangements for determining the starting pay for health staff returning to the NHS after service elsewhere, including the private sector, are a matter for those councils or, in the case of the review body groups, for the appropriate negotiating council or committee.

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the arrangements for negotiating pay and conditions of service in hospitals wishing to opt out of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Hospitals and other units granted NHS trust status will remain fully part of the NHS. Staff who transfer from health authority to NHS trust employment on establishment of a NHS trust will retain their existing contracts and all rights arising from them, subject to the substitution of the new employer for the old and any consequential technical changes. Once established, it will be for NHS trust management boards to determine the arrangements for negotiating pay and conditions of service of their staff.

Yellow Card System

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce payments to general practitioners for reporting adverse reactions through the yellow card system.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to do so.

Vaccination

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any reports of damage, either temporary or permanent, to children receiving the mumps, measles and rubella vaccine.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 555 yellow card reports of suspected adverse reactions, both serious and non-serious, to measles, mumps and rubella vaccination (MMR) have been received since its introduction in October 1988. More than 2·5 million doses of the vaccine have been distributed.

Monitoring of the safety of all vaccines by the National Institute of Biological Standards and Control, public health laboratories communicable disease surveillance centre, the Department and the manufacturers continues.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that parents who do not wish to have their children vaccinated are not subject to undue pressure from general practitioners.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to issue specific guidance in this respect. It is for GPs—who are professionally trained in this matter—to discuss vaccination with parents. All parents have the right to refuse vaccination for their children but we hope that they will not do so.

Heart Transplants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to fund Leeds as a heart transplant centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no immediate plans to announce the designation of further heart transplant centres. Earlier this year we announced that two additional centres would receive supraregional designation and funding from 1 April 1990. The new centres are at St. George's hospital in Tooting and the Northern general hospital in Sheffield. The supraregional services advisory group keeps the service under review and advises Ministers accordingly.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the range and nature of each extended skill qualification available to the personnel of the ambulance service together with the current incremental payment per annum for each.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Extended ambulance training to the NHS Training Authority standard is designed to save life and reduce morbidity and mortality by extending the skills of selected ambulance staff in endotracheal intubation, intravenous infusion and cardiac care. Some ambulance staff have received training to meet all or part of the NHS Training Authority package or to local standards but currently do not receive additional payment for this. The management side's final pay offer includes an additional £500 a year backdated to 1 April 1989 for staff with extended training to NHS Training Authority standards and required to use paramedical skills. There is also an undertaking to agree, by 28 February 1990, a national framework for the recognition of staff trained to intermediate standards with payments also backdated to 1 April 1989.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the numbers of personnel of the London ambulance service currently trained to NHSTA certificate standards who would qualify for the advertised additional £500 pay; and what increase in such numbers is planned by the London Ambulance Board.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The management of the London ambulance service is the responsibility of the South West Thames regional health authority to which I refer the hon. Member.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the pay, at 1989 prices, of a qualified ambulance person for each year since 1974.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about national basic pay rates for qualified ambulance men/women since 1974 at 1989 prices is in the table.

Ambulancemen basic pay 1974-1988 at 1989 prices

[4] Final Pay Offer.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received from police forces and the Police Federation concerning the ambulance dispute;

(2) what representations he has received from regional and district health authorities concerning the conduct of the ambulance dispute.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A few representations have been received from district health authorities and none from the police or Police Federation.

Blood

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to the answer in the Official Report, 7 December, column 369, he will list private sector organisations which have received blood from National Health Service sources; and what costs were recovered for collection, processing, handling and transporting blood.

Mr. Freeman: Information on individual non-National Health Service hospitals which have received blood from the National Health Service is not held centrally. Charges made to the private sector to recover the costs to the national blood transfusion service of collection, processing, handling and transport of blood amounted to £1,846,123 for the financial year 1987-88, and a provisional figure of £1,980,647 for 1988-89.

Resource Management

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer on 28 November, Official Report, column 228, he will name the 20 hospitals who will move into full resource management in this financial year; if he will give details of the programme for the remaining sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I am able to announce the names of 20 hospitals which will proceed further with the implementation of resource management. This involves the purchase of computerised databases and nurse information systems in this financial year. All these hospitals have been preparing for resource management since my announcement in March 1989 that we were extending the programme. I am pleased we have made such rapid progress. This is a tribute to the hard work of the Health Service and augurs well for the future. The hospitals are:

Region and hospital
Northern
  Darlington Memorial
  Royal Infirmary, Sunderland
  Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle
  North Tyneside General

Yorkshire
  Airedale General Hospital
  York District General Hospital
  St. James's University Hospital, Leeds
  Pontefract General Infirmary

Trent
  Sheffield Children's Hospital
  Northern General, Sheffield
  Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Hospital
  Doncaster Royal Infirmary
  Leicester Glenfield

East Anglian
  Addenbrookes

South East Thames
  Greenwich District Hospital
  St. Thomas' Hospital

Oxford
  Radcliffe Infirmary

Mersey
  Southport District General Hospital
  Whiston St. Helens Hospital
  Leighton Hospital, Crewe

Of the remaining sites I expect that the 30 sites of the original 50 announced in March 1989 will themselves move to full resource management during 1990-91. I expect others to join them and the National Health Service management executive is finalising details of a further 50 hospitals which will commence their preparation for resource management as soon as possible. This preparatory phase is crucial in determining how to involve doctors in the management of hospital resources with the aim of improving patient care; the management executive is discussing with the JCC what guidance can be given on this.

Abortion Bill

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the RU486 abortion pill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the past 12 months we have received some 30 representations about the drug RU486 expressing views for and against its introduction.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been done into the possible link between artifically softened water and cot deaths; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are aware of no such research. As we indicated in the Government's reply to the Social Services Committee report on perinatal, neonatal and infant mortality (Cm 741), the Medical Research Council is currently undertaking a major review of literature on research into the causes of sudden infant death. I will arrange for this question to be brought to its attention.

Community Care

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he expects the report on the development of community care services under section 11 of the Disabled Persons Act to be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Freeman: The first report will be laid before Parliament before the end of this year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Pension Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take steps to ensure that all parliamentary contributory pension fund moneys are invested in ethically acceptable investments and that investments in South African companies are disposed of.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Determination of the investment policy relating to parliamentary contributory pension fund moneys is a matter for the trustees of that fund. I understand that they have laid down broad investment policy guidelines which are designed to preserve the asset base of the fund and to ensure that the liabilities of present and future pensioners are met.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Zoonoses Order

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will repeal the Zoonoses Order.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to repeal the Zoonoses Order 1989.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any decisions have been taken by the Council of Ministers in the post-1992 control of foot and mouth disease, classical and African swine fever and rabies; and if he will list the incidence of each of these diseases in each member state.

Mr. Maclean: Community measures, agreed by the Council, are already in place for the control or eradication of these diseases but no decisions have been taken on measures to apply after 1992.

The number of outbreaks reported in member states in the last five years are as follows:

Meat (Humane Slaughter Labelling)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce a scheme of humane slaughter labelling of meat.

Mr. Maclean: The slaughter of any livestock whose meat is intended for sale must be carried out in accordance with statutory welfare conditions. The food advisory committee is to undertake a review of food labelling and will be considering very carefully the question of additional labelling to indicate farming practices and methods of slaughter.

Salmonella

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many veterinary investigation officers have been checked to see if they are carriers of salmonella; and what were the results;

(2) whether veterinary investigation officers who are used to investigate salmonella outbreaks in poultry flocks are required to be confirmed non-carriers of salmonella.

Mr. Maclean: My veterinary officers, who carry out investigations into cases of possible salmonella infection in poultry flocks, are not routinely checked to see if they are carriers of the disease nor are they required to be confirmed non-carriers of salmonella. Strict measures are taken to ensure proper hygiene and disinfection when veterinary officers visit farms.

North Sea (Industrial Waste)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what applications have been made by Her Majesty's Government for any derogation from the terms of the North sea conference agreement of 1987 prohibiting the deposit of industrial waste in the North sea after 31 December; and if he will state the quantities of material concerned, the amount of toxic content, and the periods for which application has been made.

Mr. Gummer: The ministerial declaration from the 1987 North sea conference provides for a country to show to the competent international organisation that a waste to be disposed of causes no harm in the marine environment. It has been agreed that the Oslo commission is the competent international organisation for this purpose, and the Oslo commission has agreed an appropriate procedure to be followed. Submissions have been made to the Oslo commission in respect of three wastes comprising an annual volume of 51,000 tonnes. Under the conditions of disposal the wastes are not toxic in the marine environment. The Oslo commission procedure requires that licences be reviewed every three years.

EC Sugar Regime

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will meet representatives of United Kingdom industrial sugar associations before deciding upon his attitude to the reform of the European Community sugar regime;

(2) when he expects the Commission to publish its proposals for the reform of the European Community sugar regime.

Mr. Gummer: Consultations with organisations interested in the review of the sugar regime are already under way. I will take all views put to me into account when deciding upon my approach to the review.

EC Food

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make urgent arrangements to ensure European Community meats and butter are distributed in future by Bradford council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Bradford council did not register an interest in operating this scheme and consequently I was, and am, unable to make any allocation of produce to the council under the current arrangements.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received from Bradford about inconvenience experienced by pensioners and others eligible to receive European Community butter and meats when collecting such butter and meats.

Mr. Gummer: We have received two letters enclosing some press cuttings concerning the inconvenience of queuing experienced by those seeking to obtain butter and beef in the Bradford area under the EC surplus food scheme.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the precise guidelines on the administrative arrangements for the distribution of surplus EEC butter and in particular who should collect the 5p for each pack and the intended use of the money so collected.

Mr. Gummer: The administration arrangements for the application of the surplus food scheme are set out in the intervention board's leaflet LP 39, a copy of which is being sent to my hon. Friend. To cover their administrative costs, designated organisations may levy a charge upon recipients of the food not exceeding 20p per kilogramme.

Wastes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 11 December to the hon. Member for South Shields, which countries he is in touch with in connection with the relevant wastes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Comments on our submissions have now been received from Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands, the Federal Republic of Germany and Norway.

National Fruit Collection

Mr. Speed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the future of the national fruit collection and further changes at Agricultural Development and Advisory Service centres.

Mr. Maclean: The national fruit collection, originally established at Wisley and currently situated at Brogdale experimental horticulture station in Kent, is a unique and internationally renowned source of genetic material and part of the nation's heritage. We have consistently made clear that we shall continue to provide financial support for the collection so as to safeguard its long-term future, although we would not necessarily retain it at the Brogdale site. After very careful consideration we have concluded that Wye college, part of the university of London, should become the collection's permanent home since this offers the best prospects for its future security and stability.

We announced in March that we propose to close Brogdale EHS unless alternative industry funding was forthcoming. Extensive inquiries have failed to identify sufficient industry support to sustain its R and D programme which is intended primarily for commercial growers. In the circumstances we have decided that Brogdale EHS should close as an ADAS experimental station on 31 March 1990.

Against this background we examined carefully the options for the future management of the collection. We would have liked the collection to have remained at Brogdale, but this was, unfortunately, not possible. In particular we were concerned that it would have been isolated there from wider horticultural, academic and scientific expertise and that in the long run the additional overhead inherent in a small, separate unit would have proved too great. We were attracted by Swale borough council's offer to take on the management of the collection at the Brogdale site. But we had to conclude that a borough council could not offer the perpetuity of commitment or scientific strength which is needed for the collection. This led us to the view that it was not in the best interests of the collection to stay at Brogdale after its closure as an ADAS station.

Two organisations—Wye college and the East Malling Trust—offered to manage the collection on their own sites. We carefully studied the detailed information they provided and concluded that there was a clear case in favour of Wye college. As part of the university of London, Wye college will be able to ensure the collection's long-term security and continued independence from other fruit research and breeding activites, in particular for plant variety rights (PVR) testing, a point to which much importance is attached internationally. Moreover, the college is well placed to develop the collection's use for scientific and educational purposes. We naturally gave very careful consideration to the impressive bid put forward by the East Malling Trust. We were, however, forced to the conclusion that it would be preferable to continue to keep the national fruit collection separate from other Government and industry funded activities on the East Malling site. It is in keeping with the collection's health status and current usage that it remains independent from the research and breeding at East Malling.

We have therefore decided that the collection should be transferred to Wye college. The transition will take about five years, during which the integrity of the genetic material will be properly safeguarded. In particular, the existing trees will not be removed until we are satisfied that transfer to the new site has been fully and satisfactorily accomplished.

Finally, as a further step towards the rationalisation of ADAS R and D facilities, Trawsgoed experimental husbandry farm, near Aberystwyth, Dyfed, will cease to operate as an ADAS experimental centre as from 31 March 1991. An announcement today by the Agricultural and Food Research Council outlines the council's future plans for grassland and environmental research, and makes reference to the Trawsgoed farm facilities and the part of the regional laboratory complex now surplus to ADAS reqirements. The latter was foreshadowed in the answer of my right hon. Friend the then Minister of Agriculture of 21 March and represents a successful outcome to the search of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales for alternative uses for the laboratory. Negotiations are in train to transfer to AFRC the farm and laboratory facilities which the council will require in order to implement its plans.

The Pwllpeiran site of the present combined Trawsgoed/Pwllpeiran EHF will not itself be affected by the changes at Trawsgoed. However, discussions on its future are taking place, in order to complete the programme of rationalisation in ADAS following the Government's withdrawal from funding of near-market R and D.

Conservation of Flora

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's responsibilities for the genetic conservation of flora.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 December 1989]: My Department makes a grant in aid to the royal botanic gardens for the purposes set out in the National Heritage Act 1983 which includes the keeping of its national reference collections. In addition my Department provides funding for the collection of vegetables at the Institute of Horticultural Research, Wellesbourne and maintains the national fruit collection at its experimental horticultural station at Brogdale. As I announced today in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed), we are safeguarding the collection's future by transferring it to Wye college, part of the university of London.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there are any plans to update the guidance given in the "Handbook for Delegated Medical Practitioners" as it relates to myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Scott: I understand that there are no plans to update the section of the handbook for delegated medical practitioners relating to myalgic encephalomyelitis. This handbook is prepared by the Attendance Allowance Board which is independent of the Department and Ministers.

Disabled People

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if people currently eligible for rate relief under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 will be eligible for equivalent rebates under the poll tax when it is introduced in England.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Relief under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978, which is designed to avoid imposing higher rates on disabled people if they have to make alterations to their home, will no longer be required when domestic rates are abolished and the community charge introduced. Disabled people on lower incomes will be entitled to community charge benefit, which will reduce their bill: they will receive higher amounts of benefit than other people on a similar income whose personal circumstances are otherwise the same.

Vaccine Damage Payments Scheme

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he intends to increase publicity for the vaccine damage payments scheme;

(2) in what ways the existence of the vaccine damage payments scheme has been made known to parents since the inception of the scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department of Health and Social Security issued health notice HN(79)7 and local authority social services letter LASSL(79)1 in January 1979 informing heath and local authorities of the introduction of the scheme and asking them to bring it to the notice of staff and others working with possible beneficiaries. The notice and letter are still current. The Department tries to ensure that its leaflet on the scheme is widely available in places where potential claimants are likely to seek help, including social services departments, citizens advice bureaux and voluntary organisations. There is general information on the scheme in our leaflet for sick or disabled people which is freely available in the Department's local offices and post offices. We have no plans at present for further publicity.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to allow children damaged by the mumps, measles and rubella vaccine to receive payments from the vaccine damage payments scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The list of diseases to which the Vaccine Damage Payments Act applies includes measles and rubella. We are considering whether to add mumps to the list and I shall let the right hon. Member have our decision as soon as possible.

Pensioners

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what specific addition to the retirement pension has been or is to be made to ensure that pensioners not qualifying for income support do not suffer any reduction in living standard as a result of the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The community charge will be included in the retail prices index which is used to calculate increases to the state retirement pension.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give, for each client group, a table for rates of income support showing (i) the illustrative figures in the technical annex to the 1985 White Paper, (ii) the illustrative figures uprated by the retail prices index since then, (iii) the illustrative figures uprated by the Rossi index, (iv) the amounts provided to compensate for the 20 per cent. rates or poll tax contribution and (v) the proposed income support rates for April 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [pursuant to her reply, 13 December 1989, c. 669-70]: I regret that the information given for disabled pensioners aged 60 or over was incorrect. The corrected information is in the table.

SCOTLAND

Fisheries

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the netting stations, whether or not in current use, to which district boards have granted exemptions from fishery assessments.

Mr. Lang: A district salmon fishery board has power to impose a fishery assessment in its district at such uniform rate or rates as it determines. There is no power for district boards to grant exemptions from the fishery assessment.

Tobacco and Alcohol

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have taken place in respect of illegal sales to children of (a) tobacco and (b) alcohol in each of the past five years for which figures are available; and what steps he proposes to improve enforcement of the law.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the table. It is not possible to identify offences of selling tobacco to children separately in the Scottish Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences.

Measures are under consideration to facilitate law enforcement on the sale of alcohol to children and to improve controls on off-sales, but it is not yet possible to say what form any relevant provision will take. The problem of access by children to tobacco products is also under consideration, but I am not yet in a position to say what may be the outcome.

Unemployment

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the present rate of unemployment is in Scotland; and what the European average is.

Mr. Lang: In November 1989 the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in Scotland was 8·6 per cent. of the work force

The latest available estimate of the seasonally adjusted standardised European Community unemployment rate was 9·1 per cent. of the labour force in September 1989.

National Heritage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department consulted the Forestry Commission prior to publication of the consultation paper on Scotland's national heritage.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council consulted him over the Nature Conservancy Council's own proposals for a federal structure prior to his announcement of 11 July.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend in December 1988 to advise him that a study into a federal model was being conducted by NCC.

Health Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1959 (a) the total amount spent on health and (b) the capital expenditure, giving the figures at constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is readily available only from 1974-75 and this is set out in the following tables:

Teachers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much he expects the level of vacancies for teachers to rise in the next 10 years.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to table 15 of the Scottish Education Department's statistical bulletin No. 12/B7/1989 entitled "Teachers—Key Statistics on Demand and Supply", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. Action to respond to the increased demand for teachers by increasing the intake of colleges of education is already well in hand.

School Boards and Children's Panels

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of recruitment of new children's panel members that has been achieved, with particular reference to the Strathclyde, Lothian and Central regions.

Mr. Lang: Recruitment of members of children's panels is a matter for each regional and island authority. Information is still being gathered centrally about the level of recruitment this year. Normally there are more applicants than vacancies. There is always a problem attracting sufficient suitable male applicants, and Lothian and Strathclyde regions are undertaking a second local recruiting exercise with a view to attracting more men. Central Region has, I understand, been able to meet its requirements this year from the applications received following the initial campaign.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the respective sums spent upon the recruitment of school board and children's panel members;

(2) what sum has been spent over the last year on the recruitment of members for school boards.

Mr. Lang: School board members are elected. The organisation of school board elections is a matter for education authorities. Figures on expenditure by central Government on information about school boards were set out in my reply of 27 October to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish).

On the question of expenditure on recruitment for children's panel members, I refer the hon. Member to my separate reply today.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum was spent on advertising for the recruitment of new children's panel members in Scotland in the current autumn.

Mr. Lang: The costs incurred centrally in the recent national advertising campaign for applicants to be considered for membership of children's panels amounted to £45,000. It is understood some regions have undertaken further local advertising, but details of these costs are not available centrally.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's new staffing formula for secondary schools, giving explanations for the multiplier of 0·059 and the additional factor of 10·24 which is applied to school rolls in that formula.

Mr. Lang: I will write to the hon. Member to provide him with information about the conclusions of the staffing review.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much money will be spent on student loans in Scotland in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93;

(2) how much money will be spent on student grants in Scotland in 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93;

(3) by how much his education budget will increase in cash and percentage terms in the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, excluding the costs of student maintenance.

Mr. Rifkind: My detailed expenditure plans within the totals I announced on 6 December (Official Report, columns 328-33) will be set out in the Scottish Commentary on Public Expenditure to 1992-93, which will be published in the new year.

Training Schemes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases have been found by the Training Agency of agencies or managers claiming money for trainees who did not attend their schemes.

Mr. Lang: The Training Agency's investigations have not revealed cases in Scotland where false claims were made in respect of trainees who did not participate in Employment Training, nor has it been offered substantive evidence of such cases.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inspectors the Training Agency has for employment training schemes in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Training Agency has 115 staff in Scotland monitoring training agents and training managers, and six training standards inspectors. Financial checks on all employment training providers are carried out by the Training Agency's professional accountant. The Training Agency also employs independent consultants to undertake a range of quality development tasks.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many experts have been dispensed with since employment training schemes started.

Mr. Lang: Since employment training started the Training Agency in Scotland has not found it necessary to dispense with the services of any training agent for employment training.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many training managers have been dispensed with since employment schemes started.

Mr. Lang: In Scotland the contract of one training manager for employment training has been terminated since employment training first started.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much will be spent in Scotland on the employment training scheme in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: The total planned expenditure on employment training in Great Britain in 1989-90 is £1,271 million. No separate detailed figure is provided for Scotland. However, the Scottish share is estimated at approximately £153 million. An equivalent figure for 1990-91 is not yet available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what action has been taken by the Training Agency to ensure that the traineeships offered by training agencies and training managers match Scotland's employment needs;

(2) what analysis has taken place of the skill deficiencies which employment training is remedying.

Mr. Lang: Training proposals from prospective training agents and training managers are agreed with the Training Agency and form part of the final contract. Before agreeing to seek proposals the Training Agency must first be satisfied that they are in line with local labour market needs.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is taken by the Training Agency where the misappropriation or misapplication of public funds is suspected on employment training schemes.

Mr. Lang: If misappropriation or misapplication of public funds is identified the Training Agency will undertake a full and thorough investigation.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is taken to ensure that all trainees on the employment training schemes receive the appropriate off-the-job training.

Mr. Lang: Off-the-job training provision is examined as part of the ongoing programme monitoring carried out by Training Agency staff under the approved training organisation process.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what checks are undertaken by the Training Agency to ensure that those said to be on employment training schemes are actually attending.

Mr. Lang: The ongoing programme monitoring by Training Agency staff under the approved training organisation process includes examination of records of attendance. The Training Agency has recently introduced a revised stringent system of checks.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines the Training Agency gives its staff on the frequency and volume of the monitoring of employment training schemes.

Mr. Lang: Frequent visits to training agents and training managers are undertaken by Training Agency staff in accordance with a sampling framework. The appropriate sample size for both training agents and training managers will depend on the size of the individual organisation and number of locations at which it operates. The frequency of visits will vary and will be governed by the agency's confidence in the organisation visited.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what independent research he has commissioned into the working of the employment training scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government have not commissioned any independent research into the working of employment training in Scotland. However, the Government are aware of a study of employment training in Scotland, commissioned by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the standing forum on special employment measures and the Scottish Trades Union Congress, which found that

> "despite the undoubted difficulties and drawbacks of current Employment Training, there are positive and constructive options developing which would, if taken further, lead to an improvement in the quality of Employment Training and in the longer term, to the development of an integrated policy on adult training operated through local enterprise companies".

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the nature of firms, voluntary organisations or other bodies offering placements on the employment training schemes.

Mr. Lang: It is in the first instance for training managers to build up and maintain a database on appropriate placements for employment training; the Training Agency monitors this as part of its ongoing monitoring process.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of trainees on employment training schemes enter permanent full-time jobs as a result of their training.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available in the form requested. The result of the first regular 100 per cent. follow-up survey shows that in Great Britain 59 per cent. of leavers who had completed their training went into jobs, self-employment or further full-time training.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any agents or managers have been warned or dismissed for not providing the appropriate off-the-job training on employment training schemes.

Mr. Lang: I cannot provide details of training agents and training managers who have been warned for not providing the appropriate off-the-job training because the terms of contract with training agents and training managers require such communications to be treated as commercial in confidence. No contracts have been terminated for reasons connected with the provision of off-the-job training.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether there are any controls placed on the methods used by training agents to obtain employment training scheme placements from employers.

Mr. Lang: It is the responsibility of the training managers (not training agents) to negotiate placements with employers as part of their contractual responsibilities. The suitability of such placements is monitored by the Training Agency as part of its ongoing monitoring process.

Bus Companies

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to clarify the ownership situation with regard to the proposed merger of the Scottish Bus Group and Highland Scottish; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Highland Scottish Omnibuses Limited is a subsidiary of the Scottish Bus Group and will in due course be advertised for sale as part of the programme of privatisation of the group. It is not possible at this stage to say when Highland Scottish Omnibuses Limited will be offered for sale but it is expected that the first companies will be advertised early in 1990 and that the whole programme will be complete in early 1991.

Conductive Education

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in considering the possibility of opening in Scotland a new centre using conductive education.

Mr. Lang: I am glad to announce that, subject to approval of detailed proposals, we plan to go ahead with the establishment of a new centre in Scotland for the education of children with motor disorders, such as cerebral palsy. We are making provision within the Scottish education programme for £2·5 million spread over the next three years as the Government's contribution to setting up and running the centre.

The work of the centre will be based on conductive education as practised at the Peto institute in Hungary. It will have a multi-disciplinary staff and will cater initially for about 40 children in the age range two to seven years. The centre will be available to children from all parts of Scotland and we intend that residential accommodation should be provided for children and accompanying parents who live outwith daily travelling distance.

The new centre will represent a valuable new resource for Scotland. It will extend options for parents of handicapped children and provide training facilities for staff from other special schools where elements of conductive education are used. It is hoped, also, that the centre will be able to give practical support to children who are home between visits to the Peto institute itself.

A site has not yet been chosen but an important consideration is that the centre should be within daily travelling distance for as large a number of potential pupils as possible. We hope to open the centre before the end of 1991.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Unemployment

14. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Chief Constable

15. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next intends to meet the Chief Constable of Northern Ireland; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary regularly. Our meetings are confidential and it would not be right to disclose their content.

Republic of Ireland

16. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to meet the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: It is currently planned that the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference will take place in January. I have no plans at present to meet the Taoiseach. I paid him a courtesy call in Dublin before the last Intergovernmental Conference on 30 November.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

17. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on his most recent meetings with political representatives in the Province regarding the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: I have met the leaders of all the main constitutional political parties in Northern Ireland in the months following my appointment, and the agreement was one of many subjects discussed at those meetings. The offer originally made by my predecessor to brief party leaders following meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference stands, and when requested I have given such briefings.

35. Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he is prepared to consider any alternative to the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government are of course committed to the Anglo-Irish Agreement, and to the principles it embodies. I am always ready to consider constructive proposals particularly where they enjoy a wide measure of support.

24. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussion he has had regarding the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The last Intergovernmental Conference took place on 30 November. I have met the party leaders of all the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland in the months following my appointment and the agreement was one of many subjects discussed at those meetings.

Conway Mill

18. Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Government's reasons for refusing to fund the activities at Conway Mill in Belfast.

Mr. Brooke: As indicated in my predecessor's written reply of 9 February 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) the Government's policy on the payment of public funds to community groups, where there is evidence that such payments could directly or indirectly further the aims of a paramilitary organisation, has been applied to groups operating in or out of Conway Mill because of the nature and extent of paramilitary influence within the mill.

Security

19. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

33. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross).

Small Businesses

20. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet representatives of small businesses.

Mr. Needham: While there are no firm dates at present, both my right hon. Friend and I regularly meet representatives of small businesses and small business owners in the course of our duties in Northern Ireland.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

21. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how often the Anglo-Irish Ministerial Council will meet during the first six months of 1990.

Mr. Brooke: I assume that the right hon. Gentleman is referring to the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference. We are planning to have around five meetings of the conference between 1 January and the end of July 1990.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference last met; and what subject was discussed.

Mr. Brooke: The Intergovernmental Conference last met on 30 November. The joint statement issued afterwards was placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

Youth Training Workshop

22. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of how many youth training workshops in Northern Ireland are likely to remain solvent under the proposed block funding arrangements to be introduced in 1990.

Mr. Needham: I am satisfied that workshops should be able to remain solvent under the proposed block funding arrangements as long as their management committees take action to adjust their operations to improve efficiency and cost-effectiveness. They are currently being assisted by management consultants engaged by the Department of Economic Development to prepare business plans for the future including assessing costs against likely revenue. It will be up to the management committees to decide what action to take in light of the outcome of this process.

Cardinal O'Fiaich

23. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next plans to meet Cardinal Thomas O'Fiaich to discuss terrorism in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Hare Coursing

25. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to ban hare coursing in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: No.

Integrated Schools

26. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has received to his proposals for integrated schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: A wide range of helpful responses has been made to the Government's proposals for integrated schools, as a result of which a number of detailed changes have been made in the draft order.

Planning Enforcement Notices

27. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning enforcement orders have been issued in the constituency of South Antrim in each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham:

Year
1987	2
1988	4

28. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been recovered from the investment in the De Lorean car company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: As my predecessor informed my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 7 June 1988 and 28 July 1988 Official Report columns 463 and 529, some £12·6 million has been recovered. A dividend is expected from the trustee of the De Lorean Motor Company, the United States company in bankruptcy. The recovery of further amounts will depend on the outcome of legal actions and inquiries in the United Kingdom, the United States and Switzerland.

Parade

29. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the life sentence review board and the upcoming Christmas paroles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Representations on various aspects of the life sentence review process, including the constitution and functioning of the life sentence review board, have been received from time to time. We shall be considering these representations in the light of the Government's response to the recently published report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Murder and Life Imprisonment which included recommendations about the review system in Great Britain.

As regards this year's Christmas home leave schemes for life and determinate sentence prisoners, we have received several representations about the eligibility criteria and a few on behalf of individuals.

Roadworks (Belfast)

30. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what improvements to traffic flow he expects to result from the work currently taking place on the main road in Andersonstown, West Belfast.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A central lane is being inserted for right-turning vehicles leaving one free-flowing lane in each direction. This should significantly reduce traffic congestion.

Economy

31. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the economic future of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: Northern Ireland is an integral part of the United Kingdom, and consequently its economic prospects are part of those set out by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement on 15 November 1989. In recognition of Northern Ireland's particular economic and social problems the Government continue to place a high priority on the wide range of enterprise, training and industrial development programmes which seek to strengthen the Northern Ireland economy.

Downe Hospital, Downpatrick

32. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when capital funds will be released for the third stage of the Downe hospital, Downpatrick on the Downshire hospital site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Further development at the Downe hospital is a matter for the Eastern health and social services board in the first instance. The board has made no firm proposals on this matter.

Terrorism

34. Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how he plans to defeat terrorism in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: We will ensure that the security forces have all necessary moral and physical support to interdict terrorist operations, pursue the perpetrators, and bring them to justice in the courts. We have taken measures to cut off terrorist funds and supplies. These measures aimed directly at terrorism will be enhanced and supported by wider measures of political, economic and social policy, which aim to create a fair, just and prosperous society in which local people from all sides of the community play a major part in administering the Province through widely accepted local institutions.

South Down (Jobs)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to increase job creation and industrial promotion in South Down in the next six months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government will continue to give high priority to economic development throughout Northern Ireland including South Down. Substantial resources have been made available to the Industrial Development Board and to the Local Enterprise Development Unit. Both these organisations will continue to be active in encouraging the establishment of new industry and the growth of existing businesses so as to secure viable long-term jobs for all areas of the Province.

Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act; and whether he is in a position to announce dates for the implementation of those sections of the Act which have been implemented in the equivalent legislation in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Sections 9, 10, 11 (except paragraph (4)) and 12 of the Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 came into operation on 7 December 1989. Section 4 (except paragraph (b) 5, 6, 8(1) and 11(4) will be brought into operation as early as possible in 1990, thus bringing into effect in Northern Ireland all those provisions which have to date been implemented under the equivalent legislation in England, Wales and Scotland.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to strengthen the law on food safety and consumer protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: A Food Safety Bill, which proposes substantial changes to strengthen and update existing law on food safety and the protection of the consumer's interest in the food area, was introduced in Parliament on 22 November. In accordance with normal practice in the field of transferred legislation, comparable provision will be made for Northern Ireland by Order-in-Council under the Northern Ireland Act 1974.

Coal Premises, East Antrim

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give early consideration to the need to introduce additional measures to limit the development of coal-handling premises in residential areas of east Antrim.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The present measures under planning legislation are adequate.

Governance

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has received any representations from any of the Northern Ireland political party leaders on the best way forward for the governance of the Province.

Mr. Brooke: The leaders of all the main constitutional political parties have given me their views about how political progress might best be made, and I hope to have further meetings with them.

Shorts Base

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date or dates the Department of the Environment roads service carried out inspections at the site of the new entrance and car park at the Shorts base at Lough Mann on the Downpatrick/Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 11 December 1989]: On 8 December 1988.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inspections were carried out by the Department of the Environment roads service into the new car park and entrance to the building under construction at the Shorts base on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 11 December 1989]: An inspection was carried out on 8 December 1988 examining visibility splays, sight distances, approach gradients and drainage.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recommendations the Department of Environment roads service made to the town and country planning service in respect of the new entrance and new car park to the building currently under construction at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 11 December 1989]: It was recommended that temporary approval be given to the car park for a period of 12 months and that the new entrance gates should be sited a sufficient distance from the edge of the carriageway to permit the largest vehicles which use the access to stop clear of the carriageway when the gates are closed.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what traffic surveys were carried out by the Department of the Environment roads service and RUC traffic branch adjacent to the new entrance at the Shorts base situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 11 December 1989]: No surveys have been carried out at this site. It is not normal practice to carry out a detailed traffic survey for an application of a temporary nature on to a class B road. The RUC traffic division was not previously consulted on this matter and is, therefore, not aware of any surveys being carried out.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Department of the Environment roads service will furnish the town and country planning service with its report and decision on the new entrance and new car park at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 11 December 1989]: Recommendations were supplied to the town and country planning service for temporary approval on 22 December 1988. The roads service will deal with any further applications as and when they are received.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Submarines (Disposal)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on any implications for the disposal of decommissioned nuclear-powered submarines arising from the conclusion of the recent meeting of the London dumping convention.

Mr. Alan Clark: The meeting agreed that the principles of the LDC should be applied to the disposal at sea of all vessels whether or not they are entitled to sovereign immunity. Britain stated that, were decommissioned nuclear submarines to be disposed of at sea, the Government would apply requirements no less stringent than those which they would apply to comparable waste of other origin. I must emphasise that sea disposal is only one of the options that the Government are considering for the disposal of such submarines and no decisions have yet been taken.

Trident

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of Government spending on the Trident programme for each of the next three years; and on what date it is anticipated that this programme will be reviewed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to make available long-term forecasts of year-by-year expenditure on projects. However, I can say that expenditure on the Trident programme is expected to be approximately £1,000 million in 1990-91, and approximately £4,000 million over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95. It is intended to announce a revised estimate for the Trident programme early next year.

Tornado (Toxic Emission)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the amount and type of toxic emission (a) per mile and (b) per minute of a Tornado jet.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The emissions from a Tornado aircraft's RB 199 engine include carbon monoxide, oxides of nitrogen, unburnt fuel and partially burnt fuel products, and smoke. The amount and mix of these products will depend upon a number of variable factors including the use of the after burner and the power setting of the engine. I understand there is no evidence to indicate that they present any hazard to the public during normal flying or ground operations.

Seaham Harbour Sea Cadets

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the relocation of the Seaham Harbour sea cadets; and if he will pay a visit to the Seaham Harbour cadet corps.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The sea cadet corps is constitutionally not part of the Royal Navy but an independent voluntary civilian youth organisation with charitable status to which the Ministry of Defence makes an annual grant. I understand that the Seaham Harbour sea cadets are currently negotiating locally for a plot of land on which to erect new premises to replace their present temporary accommodation. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to visit Seaham.

Bomb Disposal (Training)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it costs to train (1) an arms technician sergeant in bomb disposal, (2) a typical sergeant in the Royal Signals, and (3) a typical sergeant in bomb disposal of the RAF.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested by my hon. Friend is as follows: (1) £45,750, (2) £34,250 and (3) £57,500. In all cases these figures represent the accumulated costs of initial and subsequent training of a typical sergeant in the categories concerned, but they do not include the trainee's pay.

Royal Navy (Home Purchase Scheme)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the Royal Naval home purchase scheme costs; and how much it will cost to increase it from £3,500 to £12,000.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated cost of the long service advance of pay scheme, used by married RN personnel to assist in house purchase, is £2·7 million for the current financial year. The extra net cost of raising the maximum advance available to £12,000 is estimated to be about £31 million over 10 years, of which the majority would be required in the first three years. This estimate takes no account of the effect of fluctuations in the housing market on demands for advances. The scheme is self-financing over the long term.

European Co-operative Long-Term Initiative

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money Her Majesty's Government have committed to the European co-operative long-term initiative for defence; for what purpose; whether it will be reviewed before any binding financial commitment is made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: In common with other IEPG nations, the Government have not yet committed money to the European co-operative long-term initiative for defence (EUCLID) programme and will not do so until details of the collaborative programmes have been fully identified. It is expected that money should start to be committed during the course of 1990, as the collaboration programmes are agreed. I refer to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 24 July 1989 at column 553.

Research Agency

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards establishing a defence research agency under the Government's next steps initiative; and whether any decision has yet been taken on its status within the public sector.

Mr. Neubert: Since my predecessor's statement to the House on 16 March 1989 on the intention to establish a defence research agency (DRA), Mr. Nigel Hughes has been appointed chief executive (designate) following open competition; an MOD implementation team is taking work forward, with the chief executive (designate), to develop the organisation, procedures and infrastructure that will be needed within both the MOD and DRA; and we have been consulting the trades unions.

My Department has been considering the status of the DRA and how best to secure the necessary change. For the new and sharper relationship required, between the customers for and suppliers of defence research and project support, the DRA will need to be clearly distinct from the rest of the MOD, run on businesslike lines and with a trading relationship with its customers in MOD and elsewhere. At the same time, it must continue to make its key contribution as an independent and objective source of scientific and technical advice, in support of defence equipment procurement and related matters.

I believe that the best way forward is to establish the DRA as a Government trading fund within the Civil Service as quickly as possible. This would take the form of a distinct organisation answerable to the Secretary of State for Defence. Work will now be concentrated on putting this into effect.

As my predecessor told the House, a final decision on the move to agency status will depend upon successful completion of this work. Our target date remains April 1991.

Nuclear Warhead Test (Nevada)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the nuclear warhead test conducted jointly with the United States of America in Nevada on 8 December; what was the yield of the test; whether any radiation was released above ground from the test; whether any military operational staff were radiologically contaminated; and what was the cost to the United Kingdom of this nuclear test.

Mr. Alan Clark: Beyond confirming that the yield of the test was within the planned range of 20-150 kilotons, and assuring the hon. Member that there was no release of radiation (and hence no contamination of any personnel whatsoever), it is not our practice to answer questions of this nature.

WE177 Bomb

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the weapon systems being considered by Her Majesty's Government as a replacement for the WE177 bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: Discussions are taking place with both the United States and French Governments on options for the possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what discussions under the terms of the Anglo-United States agreement on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes of 1958, Her Majesty's Government have had with the United States Government concerning the Anglo-French co-production of nuclear air-to-surface missiles.

Mr. Alan Clark: Officials are discussing options for the delivery vehicle for the United Kingdom's future theatre nuclear weapon with both the United States and France. There are no plans for an Anglo-French collaborative programme which would fall within the scope of the United States/United Kingdom 1958 agreement.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to whether British Aerospace is currently conducting any feasibility studies into the possible development of a nuclear air-to-surface missile; and what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with British Aerospace in respect of the possible development of such a missile.

Mr. Alan Clark: British Aerospace is one of the contractors involved in the assessment of options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall bomb. No decisions on development can be taken until the current assessment studies are completed.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, under the terms of the Anglo-United States agreement on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes of 1958, the United Kingdom can conduct any collaborative programme, involving the development and production of nuclear weapon systems, with any country other than the United States of America without the prior agreement of the United States Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom is constrained by the terms of the non-proliferation treaty in collaboration with other countries on nuclear weapons. Additionally, under the terms of the 1958 United Kingdom-United States agreement, United States approval would be necessary if the information to be exchanged originated from the United States. The United States is subject to similar constraints with regard to United Kingdom information.

Equipment

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make available details of (a) main battle tanks, (b) artillery pieces, (c) armoured troop carriers, (d) combat aircraft and (e) combat helicopters in the United Kingdom's armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the NATO publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

General Dynamics

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part the Defence Exports Services Organisation has played in offset banking arrangements involving the American company General Dynamics; and what is the nature of the arrangements.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Exports Services Organisation has negotiated an industrial participation (offset banking) memorandum of understanding with General Dynamics. The purpose of the MOU is to encourage General Dynamics to offer British defence industry opportunities to bid for a share of the work on all its major defence programmes. The value of orders placed will be "banked" by General Dynamics for subsequent use, in part, to satisfy future offset obligation, imposed by the MOD when making any future purchases from the United States company.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the involvement of the Defence Exports Services Organisation in the tour of Britain by the American company General Dynamics; and what support and assistance has been given in this venture by his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Export Services Organisation in association with the DTI, various regional development authorities and local chambers of commerce organised a series of seminars and presentations given by General Dynamics as part of its marketing strategy to obtain more suppliers from the United Kingdom defence industry in support of all its major defence programmes. The DESO participated to the extent that it also briefed companies on how they could qualify to bid for work under the industrial participation (offset banking) MOU which the MOD has with General Dynamics.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met representatives of the American company General Dynamics; and what was discussed.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend has held no formal meeting with General Dynamics and, at the present time, has no plans to do so. Officials have met the company to discuss possible future orders for tanks for the British Army.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he or his officials have held or plan to hold any meetings with General Dynamics about future orders for tanks for the British Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend has held no formal meeting with General Dynamics and, at the present time, has no plans to do so. Officials have met the company to discuss possible future orders for tanks for the British Army.

Chieftain Tanks

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what numbers of new battle tanks he will order to replace Chieftain tanks now in service.

Mr. Alan Clark: This has yet to be decided.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies have been asked to submit proposals for battle tanks to replace Chieftain tanks currently in service; and what deadlines for submissions have been applied to each company.

Mr. Alan Clark: Vickers Defence Systems, General Dynamics and Kraus Maffei have been invited to submit proposals. Details of these invitations are commercial in confidence, but action has been set in hand to enable us to meet our aim of making a decision by the end of 1990.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which manufacturers have been informed by his Department of the precise number of battle tanks to be ordered to replace Chieftain tanks now in service.

Mr. Alan Clark: No decision on precise numbers of main battle tanks to replace Chieftain has yet been taken. Vickers Defence Systems, General Dynamics and Kraus Maffei have been invited to quote against option quantities.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to place the orders for new tanks for the British Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected date for his decision on the order of new battle tanks to replace Chieftain tanks currently in service.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is our intention to reach a decision on a tank to replace Chieftain by the end of 1990.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost to each service of resources deployed on ambulance duties as part of the ambulance dispute since September.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is too early to provide an estimate of the extra costs to each service of resources deployed on ambulance duties, all of which will be met by the Department of Health. Costs for the first bill to the Department of Health, for the period up to 30 November, are still being collected.

Gun Fox Vehicles

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents have occurred of CVR(W) 30mm Gun Fox vehicles currently in use in Her Majesty's armed forces; how many personnel have been killed or injured in such accidents; what remedial steps have been taken to prevent accidents from occurring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Garrison Stables

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel are employed in the garrison stables; how many horses are stabled there; how many of these horses are owned by his Department and how many by private individuals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the Household Cavalry and the King's Troop. With regard to the former 187 horses are stabled at Hyde Park barracks; 180 belonging to MOD and seven to private individuals. In respect of the King's Troop, 120 horses are stabled at St. Johns Wood; 119 belonging to MOD and one to a private individual. The total strength of the Household Cavalry at Hyde Park is 401 and at King's Troop it is 189 and all personnel are involved with work associated with horses.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Standing Committees

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many seats are reserved for staff and advisers for (a) the Government and (b) Opposition parties on the floor of Standing Committees.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Five places are made available for Government staff and advisers in Standing Committees; no such arrangement exists at present for Opposition parties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

MacBride Principles

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the adoption by companies in Northern Ireland of the MacBride principles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 December 1989]: I am not aware that any company operating in Northern Ireland has adopted the MacBride principles.

Companies in Northern Ireland have to obey Northern Ireland law. They do not have to make available information beyond that which is statutorily required.

We are in favour of jobs and of justice and we have therefore consistently opposed the campaign based on the MacBride principles because it could adversely affect existing jobs, cut new investment and hit at the creating of the new jobs and extra employment opportunities that are needed in Northern Ireland.

Equality of opportunity in employment is best achieved through Northern Ireland law and effective action.

ENERGY

North Sea (Pipelines)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what pipelines have been agreed to serve oil flow from developments in the North sea over the next four years; and if he will provide an estimate of the length of each pipeline and its tonnage of steel.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following pipelines have been authorised to serve oil flow from developments in the North sea over the next four years. These pipelines have been laid but are not yet in operation.

Field and pipeline	Approximate length kilometres	Approximate weight tonnes
Kittiwake
1 × 8 in flowline	2·0	144
Arbroath
1 × 10 in flowline	8·3	596
1 × 10 in water injection	8·3	952
1 × 8 in gas lift	8·3	408
Linnhe
1 × 6 in flowline	7·0	418
1 × 6 in gas lift	7·0	418
1 × 6 in water injection	7·0	418

In addition pipelines totalling 189 km in length and total approximate weight 39,700 tonnes have been approved in principle, although not yet authorised.

PRIME MINISTER

South Korea

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations she has received regarding the methods by which cats and dogs are slaughtered for human consumption in South Korea.

The Prime Minister: I have received approximately 950 representations on the subject of human consumption of cats and dogs in South Korea.

Footwear Imports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister whether any decision was taken at the Strasbourg summit concerning the alteration of the voluntary restraint arrangements in respect of leather footwear imports from eastern Europe.

The Prime Minister: No. The Strasbourg summit discussions on European Community relations with eastern and central Europe did not cover such specific issues.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much food aid has been given to Ethiopia in the current year by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: This year under the United Kingdom food aid programme Her Majesty's Government are providing over 27,000 tonnes of food aid to Ethiopia with a value of £6·6 million. In addition, our share of the cost of the 74,000 tonnes of food aid allocated by the European Community to Ethiopia is some £3 million.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received since 1 August concerning food aid to Ethiopia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Since 1 August there have been a number of appeals to the donor community to supply food aid for the hungry in Ethiopia. Since that time Her Majesty's Government have agreed to provide 21,700 tonnes of food aid with a value of £4·7 million in response to appeals that they have received from British voluntary agencies.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any proposals to increase food aid to Ethiopia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Within the last two weeks I have approved a further 5,000 tonnes of food aid for the hungry in Ethiopia. This brings our total food aid to Ethiopia to over 27,000 tonnes this year. We will continue to monitor the situation very closely.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Violence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to widen the types of crime covered by the categories (a) violent crime and (b) assault; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no present plans to do so, but we are always ready to consider proposals if the hon. Lady has any particular suggestions to make the law more effective.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases over the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available applications for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom by Pakistani citizens have been (a) granted, (b) refused, (c) followed by an application to enter the United Kingdom as a visitor to be present at the birth of the applicant's child, and (d) that application has been refused on the ground that an application had been made for settlement which had been refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only information available is that in the 12 months ending 30 September 1989, 5,450 applications in Pakistan for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom were granted and 2,010 were refused initially. A total of 9,190 applications for a visit entry clearance were refused in the same period because the applicant did not meet the requirements of immigration rules.

Prison Rules

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure British prisons comply with recommendation 12(873) of European prison rules and in particular with regard to (a) part II, 10, 2, regarding preparation of reports on every prisoner, (b) part II, 14, 1, on individual cells, (c) part II, 14, 2, on night supervision, (d) part II, 11,1, on allocation of prisoners with regard to their age, status and medical needs, (e) part II, 11, 4, on detention of young prisoners under conditions which protect them from harmful influences, (f) part III, 52, on training of prison staff, (g) part III, 57, on inclusion of specialist staff, such as psychiatrists and (h) part IV, 100, 2 and 3, on availability of specialised institutions under medical management; and how many British prisons fulfil these conditions.

Mr. Mellor: The recommendation adopted by the Committee of Ministers in respect of the European prison rules states that > "the governments of member states should be guided in their internal legislation and practice by the principles set out in the text of the European Prison Rules . . . with a view to their progressive implementation".

The Government comply with this recommendation.

Every establishment in Her Majety's prison service in England and Wales meets in full all the rules referred to specifically in the question, apart from those aspects of rule 14 which relate to the sharing of accommodation. On the latest available figures for the use of cellular accommodation designed for fewer prisoners than it currently holds over 70 prisons in England and Wales met its requirements. The current building programme provides for progressive reduction of overcrowding. Responsibility for prisons in Scotland rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure British prisons comply with article 10 of the international covenant on civil and political rights.

Mr. Mellor: The United Kingdom ratified the International covenant on civil and political rights on 20 May 1976, subject to the reservation that where there is a lack of suitable facilities or where the mixing of adults and juveniles is deemed to be mutually beneficial the Government reserved the right not to apply article 10.2(b) and 10.3 so far as those provisions required juveniles who are detained to be accommodated separately from adults.

In England and Wales the statutory rules, and supplementary guidance issued from time to time in the form of standing orders and circular instructions (copies of which are available in the Library), comply with the principles of article 10 subject to that reservation. They are also reflected in the prison service's statement of purpose issued in November 1988.

Governors of all prison service establishments have been asked to ensure that a copy of the international convenant is freely available to prisoners and staff in prison libraries.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure British prisons comply with resolution (73) 5 standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners adopted on 19 January 1973, and in particular with the stipulation regarding the medical examination of sick prisoners; and which British prisons fulfil this stipulation.

Mr. Waddington: The European standard minimum rules have been superseded by European prison rules adopted by the Council of Europe on 12 February 1987. The rules are not legally binding on member countries, but the prison service in England and Wales aims to reflect them in its policies and practice. Copies of the rules were sent to governors in 1988. There is no reasons to believe that any prison is failing to conform with the principles of prison rule 30(1) as regards the care of prisoners who fall sick.

Gallup Media Survey

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the Gallup media survey conducted among right hon. and hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: None.

Disabled People

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received recent representations from the British Polio Fellowship calling for changes pursuant to the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 1990s", to benefit the disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I have received representations from a number of members of the British Polio Fellowship about programme quality and diversity in relation to commercial television. The provisions in the Broadcasting Bill relating to Channels 3, 4 and 5 give the Independent Television Commission the necessary powers to ensure the maintenance of proper standards in these areas.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mrs. Saeeda Begum, date of birth 15 May 1968 ref. Imm/95359, the wife of Mr. Mohammed Jehangir, of Bradford, will be told by the post in Islamabad whether she is to be issued with a visa to join her husband.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The honourable Member will receive a reply from the unit as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Microwaves

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to assess the risk to consumers of using microwaves for primary heating of food products.

Mr. Maclean: The research results which we announced on 4 December have already led to improvements in instructions given by microwave oven manufacturers. These will lead in turn to improved evenness of cooking, irrespective of whether the oven is used for re-heating cook-chill foods or for cooking from raw. The potential risks of cooking from raw are less because the longer cooking time (including standing time) allows for greater conduction of heat through the food. When cooking from raw, consumers will in any case apply the tests normal in any kind of cooking to see whether food is cooked.

Porcine Somatotropin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, of 6 December, Official Report, column 248, on what grounds the veterinary products committee recommended refusal of porcine somatotropin.

Mr. Maclean: The veterinary products committee recommendation was based on its consideration of the data available at the time and submitted by the company. These did not show that the porcine somatotropin product concerned met the criteria for the issue of an animal test certificate.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 6 December, Official Report, column 248, whether he accepted the recommendations of the veterinary products committee in respect of porcine somatotropin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. In the event, the applicant company chose not to pursue the matter and withdrew its application.

Salmonella

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the proportion of (a) turkeys and (b) chickens sold this Christmas that will have been contaminated by salmonella.

Mr. Maclean: The results of a survey carried out by the Public Health Laboratory in 1987 were that salmonella was isolated from 65 out of 101 samples (64·4 per cent.) of frozen whole chickens. No later figures are available.

The advice given to local authorities on the identification and rejection of carcases showing signs of salmonella enteritidis infection and the 19 measures which I announced to combat salmonella earlier this year should reduce the incidence of infection in poultrymeat. Thorough cooking and proper handling of poultrymeat should remove any risk.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement regarding the most recent Government figures for teacher shortages.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The most recent Government figures are those for January 1989 which I gave in my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 24 October 1989 at column 394. The Department's September survey, which provided a broad indication of the start of term staffing situation, indicated that the position had not worsened since January. The Government will continue to take measures to attract teachers and reduce shortages.

Education Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the outcome of the meeting of the European Community Education Ministers in Brussels on 14 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I represented the United Kingdom at the Education Council in Brussels on 14 December.

The Council agreed the extension of the European community action scheme for the mobility of university students—the ERASMUS programme—for a further five years from 1990-94, at an estimated cost of 192 million ecu (about £140 million) for the first three years of the new phase.

Education Ministers also discussed co-operation with the countries of eastern Europe, and, in particular, with Poland and Hungary. We had the benefit of a prior discussion with the Education Ministers from Poland and Hungary. We recognised the importance of assistance in the field of education and training and agreed urgently to pursue proposals for the establishment of a European training foundation and the development of exchange and other programmes in these areas.

The Council also discussed technical and vocational education. We agreed conclusions inviting the Commission to review existing Community programmes in this area and to prepare proposals for further measures that might be desirable at Community level having regard to the principle of subsidiarity and the need to secure value for money.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition through advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of contracts awarded by the Department and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was three in the 1988-89 financial year and one in the current financial year to date. Of these, two were awarded following advertisement in the Official Journal of the European Communities and two were considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier.

Part-time Teachers

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to encourage the recruitment of part-time teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The employment and deployment of teachers is the responsibility of local education authorities and schools. It is for them to decide whether to employ part-time staff. Our proposed education support grant programme for 1990-91 includes support for expenditure of over £2 million on local recruitment measures to attract back more former teachers and to recruit mature entrants. The invitation to bid suggested that LEA recruitment models might include the establishment of supporting and flexible working practices such as part-time work and job share.

Grant-maintained Status

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have now approached his Department seeking advice on the possibility of obtaining grant-maintained status.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date 79 schools have embarked on the process of applying for grant-maintained status and parents at 51 of them have voted in favour of proceeding with an application. My right hon. Friend has approved 32 and rejected nine applications for grant-maintained status. Decisions on the remaining applications will be taken on their merits in due course.

Teacher-Pupil Ratio (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the teacher-to-pupil ratio in the Durham area in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The overall pupil-teacher ration in maintained schools in Durham local education authority area each year between 1979 and 1989 was as follows:

January each year	Ration
1979	18·7
1980	18·7
1981	18·5
1982	18·3
1983	18·6
1984	18·5
1985	18·5
1986	18·6
1987	18·7
1988	18·3
1989	18·3

Durham University

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on consultations held between Durham university and Teesside polytechnic about the formation of a joint board to supervise medical studies at the new college of Durham university on Teesside.

Mr. Jackson: We are aware of the local discussions about the University of Durham's proposal to develop a new college of the University of Durham on Teesside, including most recently the development of an institute of health studies. However, no formal proposal has yet been made.

Zidovudine

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the Medical Research Council/INSERM trial of zidovudine; and what information he has as to progress on the similar trial undertaken in the United States of America.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available information is contained in the Medical Research Council's press notice of 20 October, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update the figures of participants in the Medical Research Council/INSERM trial of zidovudine given in reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 6 June, Official Report, column 21.

Mr. Jackson: The number of participants enrolled in the MRC/INSERM trial of zidovudine up to 13 December 1989 was 659 in the United Kingdom and 618 in France.

Student Loans

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretry of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the extent to which students whose parents are classified as semi-skilled would be unlikely to undertake higher education following the introduction of the Government's student loan scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's proposals have been designed to apply to students in a variety of circumstances. Top-up loans mean more money for students. The Government are confident that the increase in resources will make higher education more attractive to students from all backgounds.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretry of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to set up an educational trust to promote the formation of grammar schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government's policy is not to impose any particular pattern of secondary school provision on LEAs. It would therefore not be appropriate to set up a trust to promote the formation of grammar schools. Any statutory proposals put forward by local education authorities for the formation of grammar schools would be considered on their merits.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Company Taxation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total tax benefit due to offsetting capital losses against capital gains tax (a) for industry as a whole and (b) for privatised industry, for each of the last 10 years at constant prices.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total tax benefit due to unclaimed capital allowances (a) for industry as a whole and (b) for privatised industries, for each of the last 10 years at constant prices.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that data at this level of detail are not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Overseas Entertainers (Taxation)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of withholding tax deducted from overseas entertainers for each of the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and estimated for 1989-90, for (a) the music industry, (b) the film industry, (c) sport and*(d)* other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The special scheme for deducting tax at source from payments to non-resident entertainers and sportsmen yielded £6·9 million net (after repayments) in the period 1 May 1987 (when it took effect) to 31 March 1988, £12·4 million net in 1988-89 and £8·7 million net for the eight months to 30 November 1989. A breakdown of these figures into the categories specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Advertising

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to eliminate inefficiency in Government advertising campaigns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The National Audit Office reported to Parliament on 5 December on publicity services for Government Departments and the Select Committee on Public Accounts examined witnesses on 11 December. I await the report from the Select Committee and in the meantime officials are examining the recommendations of the National Audit Office.

Valuation Services

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Government have for valuation services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: In the light of studies carried out by an interdepartmental group of officials, the Government have taken the following decisions affecting the Government's valuation services and the management of Government property.

First, a project team under Treasury leadership will investigate how best to set up consistent and compatible databases for each of the Government's main property estates, to be used both for purposes of capital asset management and for assessment of Government contributions in lieu of rates. The team will begin work shortly.

Secondly, Departments will by April 1991 be "untied" for valuation work which does not need to be undertaken in-house. Such work will be considered for market testing and contracting-out. Valuations for the purposes of assessing liability to business rates and other taxes will continue to be done in-house.

Thirdly, in general valuation services provided by Government valuers, whether to Government Departments or to other bodies, should be charged for. The aim is to introduce charging from April 1991.

Finally, the deployment of Government valuers will continue broadly as now, except that the Inland Revenue will take over from April 1991 responsibilities for valuation of the Government's estates for rating purposes from the Treasury's rating of Government property department, which will cease to exist from that date. Consideration will be given to establishing parts of the Government's valuation services as executive agencies.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Family Courts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will consider bringing forward an amendment to the Courts and Legal Services Bill [Lords] to establish a family courts system.

The Attorney-General: No, the Government hope to make further progress on family matters in the Courts and Legal Services Bill, but improvements in the procedure and jurisdictional arrangements for family proceedings can be achieved only in step with reform of the substantive law. It would not be feasible to set up a family court until the substantive law has been unified. The Children Act marked the first step in an ordered programme of reform.

Legal Aid (Northern Ireland)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Attorney-General if he will indicate for each of the last three years the numbers of persons who have received legal aid in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: The number of persons who have received legal aid certificates in each of the last three financial years is as follows:

Financial year	Legal aid certificates civil proceedings	Legal aid certificates criminal proceedings	Total
1986-87	13,108	27,685	40,793
1987-88	15,283	25,802	41,085
1988-89	14,099	22,520	36,619

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show by reference to each council area in Northern Ireland, or similar geographical area the number of persons who received legal aid in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: Information regarding persons in receipt of legal aid is held on a Northern Ireland basis and cannot be provided in any other format.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each of the last three years the sums paid in legal aid to (a) solicitors and (b) barristers by each council area in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 28 November at column 179. All information concerning sums paid out in legal aid fees to solicitors and barristers is held on a Northern Ireland basis and cannot be provided in any other format.

Water Pollution (Camelford)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 1 December, Official Report, column 451, what delay is anticipated as a result of the Director of Public Prosecutions taking over the Camelford water pollution case; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The proceedings for public nuisance instituted by the Director of Public Prosecutions are returnable at Bodmin magistrates court on 9 January 1990 and on that date the proceedings instituted on behalf of the Bodmin Angling Association will also be before the court. Decisions about subsequent adjournments and the length thereof comprise part of the judicial functions of the magistrates and it would be inappropriate for me to speculate.

Barristers

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what posts in Government and the senior Civil Service are reserved to barristers.

The Attorney-General: The duties of the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General require that they be members of the Bar.

The only post in the Civil Service at present reserves to barristers is that of Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor and Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. However the Courts and Legal Services Bill introduced in the House of Lords on 6 December would also enable solicitors and members of the Lord Chancellor's Department of the prescribed standing to be appointed to that post.

WALES

Influenza

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the availability of influenza vaccine in Wales.

Mr. Grist: In the advice issued to all family practitioner committees and district health authorities in September, general vaccination to control the spread of influenza was not recommended. However, it was advised that persons at special risk (for example, those with chronic pulmonary, heart or renal disease) should be considered for vaccination.

There are at present adequate supplies of the vaccine already in Wales, or available from the stocks held centrally by the manufacturers, to ensure that all individuals in the special risk category are vaccinated if they wish.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the current levels of influenza attacks in Wales.

Mr. Grist: An increase in influenza reports from general practitioners was noted in the second week of November. The first practices to report large numbers of cases were in East Dyfed, Mid Glamorgan and West Glamorgan. Practices in Clwyd, Gwent, Gwynedd and South Glamorgan began to report increased numbers of cases by the beginning of December.

The pattern of reporting has been firstly an increase in cases in children followed within two weeks by an increase in adult cases. The rates in children in practices in Mid Glamorgan and West Glamorgan declined in the past week but the incidence in adults has yet to show a reduction.

If the current outbreak behaves as did the smaller outbreak which affected south Wales in 1988-89 it would be expected that the incidence in children will substantially decline by the end of December. In adults, however, the outbreak is developing more slowly and its course is therefore difficult to predict.

Data supplied from the public health laboratories at Cardiff, Swansea and Rhyl indicate the main virus responsible for this outbreak is influenza A, although there are other viruses circulating among young children. Many adults would be expected to have a degree of immunity to the strain.

Veterinary Officers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the district veterinary officers for every district in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Mr. D. R. Williams is the regional veterinary officer (RVO) for Wales and Mr. D. Summers is the deputy regional veterinary officer (DRVO). The Welsh Office Agriculture Department is divided into five agricultural divisions. The following is a list of divisional veterinary officers (DVOs) in Wales:

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of all part-time employees who are (a) manual and (b) non-manual earning less than (i) £4·16, (ii) £4·32, (iii) £3·12 and (iv) £2·80 per hour for (1) men, (2) women and (3) all part-time employees, excluding overtime shift and payment-by-results premia, for Wales and in each county in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the proposals of the Development Board for Rural Wales to spend £12 million on developing new factories and business skills.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Development Board for Rural Wales' outline plans for 1990-91 will be announced in the public expenditure White Paper next January. Detailed final figures will be published in the Supply Estimates when they are presented to Parliament in March.

The allocation of provision between individual activities is largely a matter for the board.

Rural Schools

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance is given to rural country authorites in the allocation of central Government grant to take account of the increased cost of providing schools in sparsely populated areas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Rate support grant is distributed to county and district councils in accordance with formulae which are agreed with the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. Account is taken of the additional costs associated with the provision of services in sparsely populated areas by rural local authorities. Revenue support grant will be distributed taking account of similar considerations.

School Transport

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning additional support from central Government for rural local education authorities in the provision of school transport; and if he will make a statement about present levels of support.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None. As with other services provided by county councils, expenditure is supported through the revenue support grant mechanism.

Accidents at School

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide statistics showing the number of (a) fatalities and (b) other accidents involving serious injury in schools in Wales in each of the years 1979 to date; if he has any proposals to require teachers to attend first aid courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 4 December]: The data requested are not available for years before 1981.

The Health and Safety Executive has since then received reports under statutory regulations which indicate that in the period covered there have been four fatal incidents—one to an employee in 1984 and three to pupils, one in each of 1981, 1984 and in 1986-87. Changes in the regulations in 1985 resulted in data becoming available in respect of major incidents not involving death and they indicate that in 1986-87 and 1987-88 some 31 and 59 employees and 195 and 318 pupils in those years respectively were involved in reportable incidents. The increase resulted from declarations following the issue of guidance on uniform reporting standards issued to all local education authorities by the education services advisory committee.

The guidance note "Arrangements for First Aid Provision in Schools and Colleges" prepared by the Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office in consultation with interested bodies was issued to chief education officers in England and Wales in September 1987. This gave guidance to establish information reporting standards.

First aid facilities are looked at by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools as part of its normal process of inspection of schools, and I know that it will have regard to the findings of a recent report on this matter.

All LEAs offer first aid training. The great majority of teachers have some basic knowledge of first aid. Specialist teachers of all practical subjects will have received first aid training and physical education teachers in particular will have received substantial training.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Free Elections, Warsaw Pact

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the information he has on the dates of free general elections currently agreed or expected in the Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: Democratic elections are expected in the German Democratic Republic on 6 May 1990 and in Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Bulgaria by June 1990. The Soviet Union held multi-candidate elections in March 1989. In Poland semi-democratic elections were held in June 1989. The round table agreements provide for full democratic elections in four years' time.

European Proliferation Information Centre

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the recent application to his Department by the European proliferation information centre for financial support.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department has recently written to the European proliferation information centre (EPIC) agreeing to a meeting to discuss financial support and suggesting that EPIC prepare a detailed funding application.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to encourage additional countries to join the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and what information he has concerning attempts by the United States of America and the Soviet Union to convince additional states to join the treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: We regularly raise the question of accession to the treaty with non-parties at various levels. The three depositary powers of the treaty, (the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Union) attach importance to the widest possible adherence to the treaty, and frequently discuss with each other their efforts towards this end.

Comecon (High-Technology Exports)

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has formed any policy in response to the call by the parliamentary assembly of the Western European Union on 7 December to reduce restrictions on high-technology exports to Comecon countries.

Mr. Maude: COCOM's role is the protection of the strategic interests of the members of the broader Western alliance. It is not an economic embargo. With our COCOM partners, Her Majesty's Government will continue to base export licensing decisions on strategic assessments which take account of geo-political and technological realities. This means assessing whether a potential export could make a significant contribution to the military capability of the proscribed destinations and their production of modern armaments.

We will also fully contribute to the continuous review of the COCOM export control lists to ensure that items of genuine relevance to Western security are controlled (not necessarily prevented from export) and those that are not are amended or deleted from the lists.

Ethiopia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to assist in resolving the ongoing military conflict in Ethiopia between the Addis Ababa regime and its opposition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have been in contact with the parties to the conflict to urge them to negotiate a peaceful settlement. We have also taken diplomatic action with our EC partners, the USA and the USSR.

China

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic representations Her Majesty's Government are making to the Chinese Government about granting fair trials to those jailed for their political ideology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: At the Madrid European Council we and our EC partners called on the Chinese authorities to admit independent observers to attend the trials of those arrested for their part in the democracy movement. The Presidency, on behalf of the Twelve, has made subsequent representations to the Chinese authorities.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the release of political prisoners in China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Since the events of June, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received 19 letters from hon. Members and 69 letters from the public about the release of political prisoners in China. Of these, 12 letters from hon. Members and 50 letters from the public were related to a specific detainee in Tibet.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is (a) the cost to date to the Revenue of the forced removal of the Vietnamese boat people from Hong Kong and (b) the estimated cost of removal of all the boat people.

Mr. Maude: There has been no forced removal of any boat people from Hong Kong. The cost to Her Majesty's Government of the first repatriation operation was approximately £30,000. It is impossible at this stage to estimate the cost of removing from Hong Kong all boat people screened out as non-refugees.

European Monetary Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the terms of any motion of the House, together with its date and context, which contained words giving specific assent to the principle of economic and monetary union within the European Community.

Mr. Maude: The terms of all motions of this House are printed in the Official Report.

HEALTH

Breast Milk (Chernobyl)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has undertaken, funded or is aware of any research to discover if human breast milk has been effected by radioactive contamination in the United Kingdom following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Freeman: The continuing precautionary measures taken by the Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food following the Chernobyl reactor accident are designed to ensure that radioactively contaminated food does not enter the food chain. In additiona, a programme of whole-body monitoring tests commissioned by Government has shown that the levels of radioactivity taken up by people in the areas most affected by fallout from Chernobyl were very low and of minimal radiological significance.

North Middlesex Hospital

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) at what stage there will be consultation with (a) staff, (b) users and (c) the wider community regarding his decision to allow the North Middlesex hospital to opt out of the National Health Service;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that residents of Tottenham will continue to get a service from the North Middlesex hospital after it has opted out;

(3) what estimate he has made of the knock-on effect when the North Middlesex hospital opts out of the National Health Service on the resources to be allocated to St. Ann's hospital;

(4) what information he has as to the policy of Haringey health authority on self-governing status for its hospitals;

(5) what is his policy with regard to the entertaining of applications for self-governing status from hospitals within district health authorities which have voted against the promotion of such applications;

(6) whether he has received any indications of interest in self-governing status for the North Middlesex hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: One hundred and eighty-eight units, including North Middlesex hospital, have expressed interest in National Health Service trust status. There is no question of any hospital "opting out" of the National Health Service. Haringey health authority will be responsible for planning and securing a comprehensive range of services to meet the health care needs of its resident population. In doing this it will contract with a range of service providers, including National Health Service trusts. The revenue funding of individual hospitals such as North Middlesex and St. Ann's will be determined in the main by the service contracts they secure with health authorities.

The decision on whether to submit a formal application for National Health Service trust status, when Parliament has approved the necessary legislation, is a matter for the sponsors of the expression of interest in the unit concerned. We have had no representations from Haringey health authority. When formal applications are prepared, regional health authorities will ensure that they are given local publicity and will seek the views of all those with an interest, including health authorities, staff, patients, general practitioners, community health councils and the local community. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will consider these views alongside the application, before deciding whether to approve it.

Midwives

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many midwives are currently practising in the National Health Service;

(2) how many midwives are currently practising who are qualified at grade level E and at level G as sisters;

(3) how many midwives first qualified in each of the last five years;

(4) how may vacant posts for midwives there are in each of the regions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 30 September 1988 there were 19,600 wholetime equivalent qualified midwives employed in the National Health Service in England. Information for September 1989 is not yet available, therefore it is not possible to give the number of midwives in post paid on grade E and G. The numbers of newlyqualified midwives in England added to the register held by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting in each of the last five years are:

1986	2,599
1987	3,820
1988	2,523
1989	2,432

The figure for 1987 includes some midwives who registered their midwifery qualification for the first time in 1987 although they obtained it in a previous year. The figure is not therefore comparable with those for the other years.

Information on vacancy levels is not collected centrally.

Doctors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1980 the total number of doctors employed by the National Health Service and express this as a percentage of the 1980 figure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is given in the table:

	Total Doctors	Expressed as a percentage of base year: 1980
1980	63,130	—
1981	64,612	102·3
1982	65,591	103·9
1983	66,910	106·0
1984	67,282	106·6
1985	68,194	108·0
1986	68,839	109·0
1987	69,532	110·10
1988	70,866	112·3

Notes: Includes permanent paid and honorary staff; excludes locum staff, hospital practitioners and clinical assistants in the hospital and community health services. Includes general medical practitioners.

General Practitioners

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners were practising on the Isle of Wight in 1979 and 1989; and what was the ratio of patients to doctors in 1979 and 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of unrestricted principals practising on the Isle of Wight at 1 October 1979 was 56, compared with 69 at 1 October 1988 (the latest date for which information is available). The respective ratios of patients to doctors were 2,134:1 in 1979 and 1,889:1 in 1988.

Population Statistics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the resident population of a health district is assessed; and whether the student population, where substantial, is included in the resident population.

Mr. Freeman: The estimated population of a health district includes all those usually resident there, whatever their nationality; students are taken to be resident at their term-time address and members of Her Majesty's and non-United Kingdom armed forces in England and Wales are included at their station. The current series of estimates is derived from the 1981 census of population and then updated annually to allow for subsequent births, deaths, and migration (including students). In addition, annual adjustments are also made for changes in the numbers of stationed armed forces and their dependents, and boarding school children.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report the scales of pay for ambulance staff in the categories (a) ambulanceman/woman, (b) qualified ambulanceman/woman, (c) leading ambulanceman/woman under (i) the current rates of pay and (ii) those now offered by the management side on 5 December and effective from 1 April.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is given in the table:

	Current rate	New rates from 1 April 1989
		Basic	Extended trained[3]
1. Outside London
Leading ambulanceman/woman	10,888	11,868	12,368

[1] London weighting (LW) is currently paid separately and does not count for overtime purposes.

[2] New all-inclusive London salary to count in its entirety for all purposes including the calculation of payments for overtime worked.

Hospital Services

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the annual savings made across the National Health Service in England and Wales since competitive tendering was introduced for catering, cleaning and laundry services; and if he will express this as a percentage of the total cost of these services.

Mr. Freeman: Overall annual saving arising from the competitive tendering initiative for National Health Service catering, cleaning and laundry services in England amount to some £110 million—around 17 per cent. of previous costs.

Information about Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Nuts

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has analysed dry nuts imported from Greece and Turkey to check them for radioactivity at levels above those advised by the European Commission as tolerable for consumption.

Mr. Freeman: In the interests of the consumer, port health authorities are continuing to monitor certain imported food (including dry nuts) for radioactive contamination caused by the Chernobyl nuclear accident. United Kingdom monitoring has not detected excess contamination levels in dry nuts over the last year.

Aminoacid Isomerisation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions are being taken by his Department to evaluate the reports by G. Lubec, C. H. R. Wolf and B. Bartosch, of the paediatrics department of the university of Vienna, concerning aminoacid insomerisation and microwave exposure as reported in The Lancet of 9 December, a copy of which has been sent to him: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 13 December at column 698. The views expressed are held jointly by the Ministry and this Department.

Self-governing Hospital, Bassetlaw

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the expenditure incurred by Bassetlaw health authority in the last 12 months on newspaper advertising for public relations purposes and other official publications primarily to promote the idea of a self-governing trust for the health authority and Bassetlaw hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the local health authority and the hon. Member may like to write to the chairman of Bassetlaw health authority for the information.

Mr. James Butler

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the legal advice sought by Bassetlaw health authority following its refusal to pay Mr. James Butler an early pension following his redundancy; and what advice was given.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the local health authority and the hon. Member may like to write to the chairman of Bassetlaw health authority about it.

NHS (Inflation)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allowances are being granted to hospitals throughout the country to compensate for the difference between the Government forecast of and the actual inflation rate in the National Health Service: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities operate under the cash planning system and are expected to meet all pay and price increases and develop services within the total resources available to them. Additional funds are not normally provided to take account of higher than expected inflation or other unforeseen demands. This year alone we have provided an additional £1 billion for hospital and community services (HCHS) compared with 1980-89. They have also benefited from the effect of reduced superannuation contributions and new cost improvemens. Next year the total resources available to the HCHS will increase by over £1·3 billion.

Charity Donations

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the amount of charity donations used by health authorities towards Health Service funding.

Mr. Freeman: NHS trust funds may be used for any purpose relating to the Health Service subject to the specific terms of individual trusts. The 1988-89 summarised account of trust funds held by regional and district health authorities and special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals and special trustees record total expenditure of £122·6 million excluding transfers to reserve (subject to audit). This sum includes some expenditure which would not have been appropriate for Exchequer funding.

Great Ormond Street

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to finance the Great Ormond Street children's hospital.

Mr. Freeman: The Hospitals for Sick Children special health authority, of which Great Ormond Street children's hospital is part, received an initial revenue cash limit for 1989-90 of some £44·0 million. Subsequent additions to this have included £0·4 million to help meet the costs of the review body awards for doctors, dentists, nurses, midwives and the professions allied to medicine, and £0·1 million towards the costs of implementing the NHS review. The overall revenue allocation for the London postgraduate special health authorities for 1990-91 will increase by 2·27 per cent. in real terms. Detailed initial revenue cash limits for individual special health authorities will be issued in the new year.

Charity Donations

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations cover the use by health authorities of charity donations for Health Service funding.

Mr. Freeman: The management and use of NHS trust funds is a matter for the appointed trustees in accordance with general trust and charity law. Health authorities have powers under sections 90 to 96 of the National Health Service Act 1977 (as amended) to accept, hold and administer any property on trust for all or any purposes relating to the Health Service and to engage in fund-raising activities for providing or improving any services.

Guidance to health authorities on the extent and use of fundraising powers and the management and accounting for trust funds is set out in health circulars HC (80)11 and HC (85)6.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will itemise the draft European Community directives currently under consideration relating to alternative and complementary medicine; what representations he is making in Brussels to ensure their acceptability; and what consultations are taking place and with which representatives of United Kingdom bodies likely to be affected by such directives.

Mr. Freeman: The services of the commission have under consideration proposals relating to the harmonisation of requirements for the marketing of homeopathic products. These have been the subject of preliminary discussion with member states. United Kingdom interests will have the opportunity to comment on any proposals for draft directives following their formal publication by the commission.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will itemise the expenditure on research funding and other financial support allocated to alternative and complementary medicine; and what percentage this represents of total funding by his Department on the medical research budget.

Mr. Freeman: As far as research is concerned I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 27 November at column 102. The Department has given a grant of £60,000 over two years to the Research Council for Complementary Medicine towards the council's central adminstrative expenses.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what increased role he anticipates for alternative and complementary medicine resulting from the pending structural reforms in the National Health Service;

(2) what is his assessment of the impact of his proposed reforms in the National Health Service on a wider availability of alternative and complementary therapies, for patients within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: We have no proposals to make alternative and complementary therapies more widely available within the NHS.

Medical treatment provided under the NHS must by law be prescribed by a medical practitioner. Such practitioners can offer to use alternative or complementary therapies in their treatment of patients, but the wider use of such methods within the NHS depends upon those who use them persuading more of their fellow practitioners of the benefits and effectiveness of such treatment.

Hospices

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contribution he is prepared to make to the costs of voluntary hospices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There will be a substantial increase in funds to health authorities next year, so that they can contribute more to the voluntary hospice movement. We are allocating £8 million to health authorities in 1990-91, specifically earmarked for terminal care provided by voluntary organisations. This will bring the total contribution from public funds up to nearly £20 million a 70 per cent. increase over the 1988-89 figure. Health authorities will use this money to increase the contribution they already make to voluntary hospices and similar organisations which provide palliative care and support for patients with terminal illnesses and their families.

These extra funds are a clear mark of the Government's strong support for the hospice movement. They are also an important step towards creating a closer partnership between the NHS and the movement. The Government's objective is to work towards a position in which the contribution from public funds available to voluntary hospices and similar organisations matches that of voluntary giving. This will provide a clear basis on which to plan ahead.

We are deeply appreciative of the high standard of continuing care that has been developed and provided by the independent hospice movement and welcome its growing partnership with the National Health Service in caring for people who are terminally ill and their families.

HIV

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the conclusions drawn from the expert symposium jointly organised by the health departments and the Health Education Authority on 24 November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Departments and the Health Education Authority organised an expert symposium on 24 November to assess the current and future spread of HIV and AIDS in the United Kingdom. The proceedings will be published early in the new year. The clear conclusion of the symposium was that AIDS is a major threat throughout the world. There are three major modes of HIV transmission, all of which are now well-established in the United Kingdom. These are:

Complacency must be avoided in our efforts to combat HIV and AIDS. There is still much to discover, but the long incubation period when a person is infectious with no obvious sign of illness, together with the usually fatal outcome of the disease, mean that it would be foolhardy to depart from a precautionary approach. We must establish the facts, we must plan, and we must educate.

In the light of this the Government remain committed to providing a framework for response which encourages effective and responsible action among statutory and voluntary bodies, and individuals. The five main aims of our strategy are:

To stem the spread of HIV infection through public awareness campaigns, community-based prevention initiatives, and improved infection control procedures;

To improve understanding of the epidemiology of HIV infection, how it is transmitted, the natural history of the disease, and how HIV-related illness can be prevented and treated;

To provide appropriate diagnostic, treatment, care and support services for those affected by HIV:

Through a range of measures to foster a climate of understanding and compassion, to discourage discrimination, and to safeguard confidentiality, within the wider context of public health requirements;

To foster and encourage the full and continuing exchange of information between countries, and to encourage countries not to adopt coercive and discriminatory measures.

Yellow Card System

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated proportion of adverse reactions that are reported through the yellow card system.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 14 December 1989]: Doctors are asked to report all suspected adverse reactions to new drugs but only serious reactions to established drugs. Exact reporting rates are not known but a number of studies and questionnaires have indicated that they rarely exceed 10 to 15 per cent.

Peto Institute

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about United Kingdom support for the international Peto institute.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

We continue to value conductive education as practised at the Peto institute in Budapest and welcome the Hungarian Government's plans to build a new international institute in response to increasing demand from a number of countries as well as the United Kingdom.

We recognise that there is a wide and effective range of services for disabled children in this country and we believe that increased availability of conductive education would be a valuable addition to those services.

Conductive education is an educational system based on a whole person approach, which aims to develop children with a motor disability to enable them to participate fully in mainstream education. The professional input comes from one individual, the conductor, who takes the child through the whole range of processes connected with development. The conductor's role integrates some of the knowledge and skills of a number of separate professional groups, for example, physiotherapists, occupational therapists, teachers and nurses. Close and active parental involvement is an important feature of the system.

We have concluded that the best way forward is to enter into an agreement with the Hungarian Government that in return for a financial contribution towards the capital costs of the new institute the United Kingdom would have guaranteed access to a proportion commensurate with our contribution of the available places both for children to receive conductive education and for trainees to be trained as conductors. In this way we would secure the continuing availability of conductive education for United Kingdom children in Budapest while building up a nucleus of trained conductors to provide this service in the United Kingdom.

We have therefore agreed to provide a total of £5 million from Government funds over the next four financial years towards the capital costs of the new institute subject to conclusion of a satisfactory agreement covering access for the children and trainee conductors, and to satisfactory progress with construction. In addition, we will be seeking to stimulate interest in the private and voluntary sectors with a view to supplementing the Government contribution by a similar amount raised from these sources. Officials will be taking forward the detailed negotiations with the Hungarian authorities early in the new year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) applications were made, (b) allowances were granted, (c) reviews undertaken and (d) allowances were reviewed and then withdrawn with respect to the attendance allowance in each of the years 1985 to 1989.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Attendance allowance:

[1] To 30 September 1989.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what new guidance has been issued in the last two years regarding eligibility for attendance allowance; (2) what new guidance has been issued in the last two years regarding the review of attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: Guidance about the eligibility criteria for attendance allowance and about the review of decisions is issued by the independent attendance allowance board in its "Handbook for Delegated Medical Practitioners". Copies of the handbook published in July 1988, and copies of a revised version issued to delegated medical practitioners in October 1989, are in the Library. The published edition took account of the changes introduced by the Social Security Act 1988 for people whose disabilities pose a risk of substantial danger at night, and the 1989 version incorporates new or revised guidance about thalassaemia in children, cystic fibrosis, the assessment of substantial danger, claimants who are at risk of falling and those who refuse to undergo medical examination.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much a single man aged 22 years (a) living with parents and (b) living in a council flat received in unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit with or without income support if he was unemployed on 1 April in each year between 1979 and the current year; and if he will express these payments in real terms taking 100 as the base for 1 April 1979.

Gross Expenditure

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give gross spending for his Department (a) in cash terms and (b) in real terms using April 1979 as 100 both (i) as a percentage of gross domestic product and (ii) per 100,000 of the population for each year from 1978 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is set out in the table.

Benefit Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each of his Department's benefit offices based in (a) each local authority and (b) each constituency indicating which are (i) national insurance offices, (ii) income support area offices, (iii) integrated local officers and (iv) caller offices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Office Evaluation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the eight local offices participating in "Delivery of Service in the 90s".

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The offices are:—

Blackpool South
Cowdenbeath
Ealing
East Kilbride
Glasgow (Maryhill)
Glasgow (Rutherglen)
St. Helens
Southampton

Computerisation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish his latest estimate of the savings, in cash and staff terms, from the computerisation programme for each year to and including 1995.

Mr. Scott: The latest estimate of cumulative staff savings resulting from the computerisation of social security benefits is shown below. The figures (at 1988-89) prices are for both this Department and the Department of Employment.

	£ million	Posts
1989-90	42	4,000
1990-91	80	7,500
1991-92	160	15,000
1992-93	195	18,000
1993-94	220	20,000
1994-95	220	20,000

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent his Department's (a) budget and (b) staffing level has been cut for the year 1990-91 in the light of savings achieved through computerisation.

Mr. Scott: The Department's administration budget for 1990-91 was settled during the recent public expenditure survey. Details will be published early in the new year in the public expenditure White Paper.

The provision for 1990-91 reflects the wide range of the Department's activities, including our major computerisation programme.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) manually held and (b) computer-held information on individual claimants his Department's officers and officials are (a) required and (b) permitted to pass to a third party; and to whom it is passed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information passed to third named in legislation is limited to that which is necessary for carrying out statutory functions such as the collection of contributions, payment of benefit, operation of the occupational pension scheme, registration and payment of, and awarding benefit in respect of, the community charge and operation of the housing benefit rebate scheme.

In other circumstances, where there is no statutory function, requests for information from social security records made by other Government Departments are considered only if the information would prevent the duplication of public funds, would help the prosecution of a serious crime, would meet the welfare needs of the individual concerned or would be in the public interest.

Information may be required under the terms of an order of a court of law and the information required under the terms of that order is provided to the court.

Information may also be disclosed in confidence to the police in cases which involve serious crime.

Where the individual concerned provides written consent to information being provided to a third party, the request will normally be met.

Internal Market

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) at local office level to adjust the benefit service to respond to completion of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Scott: I do not expect that the completion of the internal market in 1992 will require any changes to the benefit service provided by the Department.

Research Projects

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research projects, are currently being carried out under total or partial sponsorship of his Department; whom they are being carried out by; and when they will be completed and published.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table details the research projects currently being carried out under total or partial sponsorship by the Department; by whom they are being carried out and the latest information on completion dates.

Most research studies are expected to result in publication. Within this general expectation, no decisions have yet been made with the researchers about the content and timing of publication of many of the studies currently in progress. However, two studies on the income and expenditure of disabled people and the living standards of unemployed families are due to be published early in 1990 by Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Family Credit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why he has reduced his estimate of the number of families eligible for family credit to 500,000.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figure of 500,000 was announced on 17 March 1989 in a reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham), at column 391-92, as the estimate of the eligible population during 1988, and was obtained from a special examination of family expenditure survey returns for April to December 1988. It relates to employees only. A technical note setting out the basis of the estimates was placed in the Library on 24 April 1989.

Estimates of the number of eligible families for any period since 1988 will be possible only when information from the 1989 family expenditure survey becomes available.

War Widows' Pensions

Mr. Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he expects his Department's maximum possible expenditure, at 1979 prices, to be on war widows' pensions in the year 1989-90.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest estimate is that 1989-90 expenditure on war widows' pensions will be £193,729,000 (£82,331,204 at 1979 prices). This does not, of course, include any payments made by the Ministry of Defence or the recently announced special payments.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will place in the Library each week the temperature information he receives from the Meteorological Office for the purposes of regulation 2 of the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Regulations 1988.

Mr. Scott: Yes.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether officers of his Department are authorised to pass information about individual claimants or members of their households to local authorities for the purpose of poll tax registration.

Mr. Scott: Yes, under the terms of the Community Charge (Information Concerning Social Security) Regulations 1989 and the Community Charges (Information Concerning Social Security) (Scotland) Regulations 1988.

Family Incomes

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing child benefit expenditure broken down into (a) gross income bands, (b) gross equivalent income bands and (c) net equivalent income bands, showing the number of children falling into each band.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Information about the income of families receiving child benefit is not routinely collected. The following figures relating to the distribution of gross and net income are made on the basis of sample survey data which are subject to normal sampling and response variations. The equivalised income bands shown in the tables do not necessarily reflect the actual incomes of couples with children; they represent their incomes equivalised to the incomes of couples without children. Tables (b) and (c) do not therefore show the number of children falling within actual income bands for couples with children since their actual incomes will generally be higher than the equivalised amounts shown. Thus, for a married couple with two children aged nine and 11, the actual income is likely to be 150 per cent. of the equivalised amount and for a married couple with three children aged nine, 11 and 13, 175 per cent. of the equivalised amount.

Notes:

1. Estimates do not sum due to rounding.
2. Estimates are based on the 1985 and 1986 FES uprated to 1989-90 earnings and benefit levels.
3. Gross income is the family's total income from all sources including benefits.

[1] Deductions cover the cost of current consumption and, where necessary, a specific amount to clear an outstanding bill. Numbers of cases have been rounded to the nearest 500.

[2] Data for 1989 are not yet available.

[3] For figures over £20 per week the bands have been amalgamated as shown, since in single pound bands most would contain no cases or less than 500. The method by which these estimates are obtained does not imply a high level of precision for such numbers.

EMPLOYMENT

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the United Kingdom share of European social fund allocation for each year from 1979 to 1990 by percentage and total.

Mr. Eggar: The European social fund allocation to the United Kingdom for each year from 1979 to 1989 (the latest year available) is listed in the table by total and percentage.

European social fund
Allocations to the United Kingdom (figures have been rounded)

1979	105	25·4
1980	135	23·3
1981	141	24·8
1982	257	29[illegible]
1983	321	29·5
1984	353	31·6
1985	308	23·7
1986	280·5	16·4
1987	435·5	18·8
1988	405·3	19·1
1989	418	18·1

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any transitional period has been allowed for running down European social fund training schemes experiencing a reduction of grant as a result of the introduction of new criteria in 1990.

Mr. Eggar: Historically all schemes have had to make fresh applications each year for European social fund support with no guarantee of subsequent funding. This remains the situation for at least the first year of the new European social fund arrangements. As yet, the amounts for the United Kingdom in future years is not known and, therefore, the effect on individual schemes cannot be gauged.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition through advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Eggar: The number of contracts awarded by the Department of Employment group and covered by the provisions of the European Economic Community supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,00, was 12 in the 1988-89 financial year and 14 in the current financial year to date. Of these, seven were awarded following advertisement in the Official Journal of the European Communities and 19 were considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Eggar: The Training Agency has two accountancy firms under contract at present; no other accountancy firms are currently employed by my Department. Accountancy firms are invited to tender for the provision of advisory services to Departments on the basis of their suitability to provide the relevant advice. In making such appointments consultations are carried out as necessary, and where appropriate in the light of advice given by Treasury on consultancy appointments.

Durham Jobcentre

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the highest and lowest rates of pay for jobs advertised at the Durham jobcentre.

Mr. Eggar: On 12 December the highest rate of pay for a job advertised at the Durham jobcentre was £175 per week and the lowest £86 per week.

Benefit Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list each of his Department's benefit offices based in (a) each local authority and (b) each constituency.

Mr. Eggar: This information is available only at disproportionate cost.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress his Department has made towards establishing executive agencies; and what is the timetable for completion.

Mr. Eggar: On 1 December the Secretary of State announced his intention that the employment service should become a next steps agency from 2 April 1990. The ES is the largest and most important area of Government work to be created as an agency so far, employing over 35,000 staff and with a budget approaching £1 billion.

In line with all other Government Departments, the Employment Department is committed to a rolling review of other areas of work to identify possible agency candidates.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a revised and updated table providing the information published in the Official Report on 28 February, columns 171-176.

Mr. Nicholls: The tables show the work force in employment, male and female, full-time and part-time, for each quarter since 1980 with actual and percentage changes by quarter and year.

For dates prior to 1984 census, the approximate estimates have been derived by the interpolation of the proportion of male employees who were part-time on the census dates. The estimates have only been made for June of each year from June 1979 to June 1982, but are quarterly from March 1983 to June 1984.

Mr Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of all part-time employees who are (a) manual and (b) non-manual earning less than (I) £4·16, (ii) £4·32, (iii) £3·12 and (iv)) £2·80 per hour for (1) men, (2) women and (39 all part-time employees, excluding overtime, shift and payment by results premiums, for Great Britain and in each county and standard economic region in England, and in each London borough.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update the table published in the Official Report on 20 July, columns 321-326, showing the number of male and female full-time and part-time workers on adult rates and the estimated average earnings in each case, and the number of full-time and part-time workers who were temporarily employed in each case; and what estimate he is able to make of similar data for the self-employed and for workers on non-adult rates.

Mr. Nicholls: Such estimates as are possible for 1989 are provided in the following table:

[2] Denotes data either not available or no reliable estimate possible.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the proportion of wages council employees throughout the wages council sectors, broken down by (a) collective agreement and (b) industry, earning below (i) £4·16, (ii) £4·32, (iii) £3·12 and (iv) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, payment by results and shift premiums.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of (a) part-time and (b) full-time employees earning below (i) the PAYE threshold and (ii) the national insurance contributions lower earnings limit in 1989 and for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Action for Jobs campaign began and ended.

Mr. Eggar: The Action for Jobs campaign was launched on April 8, 1986. The campaign ended on July 16, 1988, with the conclusion of the Action for Jobs south-west regional campaign.

Deaths and Injuries (Coal Industry)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of miners employed by British Coal or by contractors engaged by British Coal who were killed or seriously injured in accidents in the mine in each of the last 10 years; and what is the number of such accidents per 100,000 shifts worked in each of those years.

Mr. Nicholls: The information for the 10-year period 1979 to 1988-89 is provided in the table.

Year	Fatal[6]	Rate per 100,000 manshifts[7]	Major injury[6]	Rate per 100,000 manshifts[7]

[1] Introduction of NADO Regulations 1980 on 1 January 1981 widened the accident categories.

[2] Introduction of RIDDOR Regulations 1985 on 1 April 1986 further widened the accident categories.

[3] Figures for 1984-85 cover a 15-month period which included a period of industrial dispute and as such are not comparable with any other year.

[4] Provisional figures.

[6] Figures include accidents both to British Coal employees and to contractors.

[7] Manshifts counted are only for British Coal employees and do not include manshifts worked by contractors. The rate per 100,000 manshifts is, therefore, higher than the true rate.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Petrol Supply

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into the supply of petrol by wholesale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has been investigating the supply of petrol and is due to report by 20 December. While that inquiry is in progress it would not be appropriate for Ministers to take account of any representations. Representations should be made to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission direct and this advice is given to anyone who approaches the Department.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many qualified scientists and engineers are employed on the staff of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood: Five staff of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are qualified scientists or engineers.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many qualified scientists and engineers are members of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood: Two regular members of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are qualified engineers. In addition, one member of the telecommunications panel has both scientific and engineering qualifications.

Portugal

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further steps Her Majesty's Government have taken, or proposes to take, following the removal of excise tax discrimination in the spirits sector in Portugal, to press for the removal of the remaining value added tax discrimination.

Mr. Redwood: Following representations by the Government, the European Commission examined the compatibility of Portugal's VAT structure with EC law. The Commission has not found the system to be discriminatory, but it remains a matter of concern to the United Kingdom and my Department is preparing further observations on Portuguese VAT for the Commission to consider.

Development Assistance

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what sources of grants from public funds are available for the development of safe harbours, fishing quay facilities, tourist development and rural infrastructure in the south-west;

(2) what sources exist for grant aid from the European Community for the development of safe harbours, fishing quay facilities, tourist development and rural infrastructure; and whether north Devon would be eligible for such grants.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following sources of grants from national public funds and from the European Comumunity are available for the named sectors:

(i) Developments are eligible for support from the European regional development fund if they are located in an area designated for objective 1, 2 or 5(b) of the Community structural funds, provided the Community support framework for the area so provides. The assisted areas of Devon and Cornwall are designated for objective 5(b), the development of rural areas. The North Devon constituency is, however, not in the assisted areas.

(ii) The European social fund (ESF) provides grants throughout the Community for employment and training measures for the long-term unemployed, and those aged under 25 who have left full-time education (objectives 3 and 4 of the funds). If measures connected with the sectors listed are aimed at people within these groups, they are eligible for ESF support subject to the European Commission's decision on funding priorities.

(iii) The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food gives grants to farmers in all areas of England for the development of tourist accommodation and other on-farm tourist developments. Grant of up to 50 per cent. is available under section 2 of the Fisheries Act, 1955 for the development of fishing facilities by non-profit making organisations. Support for certain fishing quay facilities is available from the European Commission throughout the Community under regulations 355/77 and 2321/88; the Commission pays up to 25 per cent. and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food up to 8 per cent. of the total cost.

(iv) Consultancy grant under the DTI Enterprise Initiative is available to eligible businesses which meet the appropriate scheme criteria in respect of the development of safe harbours, fishing quay facilities and tourist development in the south-west. In addition regional selective assistance is available for such developments in the assisted areas of Devon and Cornwall and regional enterprise grant in the development areas of Cornwall.

(v) The Rural Development Commission offers grants and loans to economic and tourism projects and grants to environmental improvement schemes in rural development areas. Urban programme funding is available for suitable tourism projects of benefit to inner areas in the two urban programme authorities of Plymouth and Bristol. Derelict land grant is available for the reclamation of derelict land to provide sites for development and infrastructure.

(vi) Transport supplementary grant is available to all local highway authorities to assist with capital expenditure on roads and traffic management projects. In assisted areas, grants under the Industrial Development Act 1982 are available to both private developers and local highway authorities for new roads to developments which will lead to a real increase in employment.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries in which Britain was in deficit as regards textiles and clothing and the value of the deficit in pounds sterling for 1988, 1987, 1986 and 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A list of countries and deficits for 1987 and 1988 is given in the attached table. Extraction and provision of data for 1986 and 1985 could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Research and Development

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his evaluation of the European Commission proposed framework programme in research and technological development —1990 to 1994 [Com(89) 397 Final]; and what benefits will accrue to the United Kingdom from this programme in the fields of (a) information and communication technologies, (b) industrial and materials technologies, (c) environmental sciences, (d) life sciences and technologies, (e) energy and (f) human capital and mobility.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science has asked me to reply as I represent Her Majesty's Government on matters of science and technology policy in Europe. I refer the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy to the recent statement I made to the House in opening the debate on Europe Community research and development. (Hansard, volume 163, No. 16, Monday 11 December 1989—column 814.)

Bananas

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the annual tonnage of dollar banana import quotas allocated to United Kingdom independent companies in each of the past five years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 13 December 1989]: The following tonnages of dollar banana import quotas have been allocated to United Kingdom independent companies during the past five years:

	Tonnes
1989	30,000
1988	25,000
1987	27,299
1986	21,075
[1]1985	24,475

[1] The quota period was from 1 October 1984 to 31 December 1985.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the dollar banana import quota has been allocated to Scottish-based importers in each of the last five years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Allocations are based on past trade, not on geographical location.

During 1988 and 1989, Scottish-based importers were allocated 6·5 per cent. of the independents' dollar banana quota.

Figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

General Dynamics

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support or assistance his Department has given to the American company General Dynamics in connection with its current tour of Britain.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 December 1989]: In co-operation with the Ministry of Defence, Defence Export Sales Organisation and the Defence Manufacturers Association, my Department assisted General Dynamics Corporation in organising a seminar in London on 5 December 1989.

The objective of the seminar, which was well attended by more than 100 representatives of British companies, was to advise on the best methods of securing business from all General Dynamics' operating divisions, and exploiting the "offset banking" (industrial participation) agreement negotiated by the Ministry of Defence with the company.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the American company General Dynamics; and what was discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 December 1989]: Neither the Secretary of State nor I have met representatives of General Dynamics since we were appointed to the DTI.

RECHAR

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if contributions to mining areas from the European Community RECHAR plan will be to cover further proposed job losses in mining areas; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has information on the distribution of funds by the European Community under the RECHAR scheme; whether areas other than those who qualify for regional aid will receive assistance; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if the European Community RECHAR plan will help to improve environmental problems in the derelict mining areas; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what assistance the European Community RECHAR fund will provide to help attract new investment into the area of Molefield district council; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information he has about the special European Community plan called RECHAR which is designed to help rundown coal mining areas; how it will apply to the Normanton constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 December 1989]: The European Commission announced on 2 August 1989 its decision in favour of RECHAR, an initiative for Community structural fund grants for areas affected by job losses in coalmining. The Government have welcomed this decision.

The Commission has subsequently decided on an indicative financial allocation for RECHAR of 300 million ecu for the five years 1990 to 1994. Details of which areas will be eligible for RECHAR, the measures eligible for grant and the criteria for financial allocations, have not yet been settled. A further Commission decision is expected soon.

The hon. Member's interests will be borne in mind in my Department's discussions with the Commission about its forthcoming decision.

SCOTLAND

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for Scotland for each year since 1974-75 (i) total National Health Service expenditure, (ii) current expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (iii) capital expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (iv) expenditure on the family practitioner services, (v) expenditure on centrally funded National Health Service services, and (vi) expenditure on personal social services, giving each in (a) cash terms, (b) adjusted using the relevant pay and prices index and (c) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator; and if he will place in the Library details of the methods used to make these adjustments.

Mr. Rifkind: The information in the format requested is not fully available. As I indicated to the hon. Member in my letter of 30 March 1988, there is no index which relates to the movement of pay and prices within the Health Service in Scotland. The Department of Health maintains indices for pay and price movements in England, but the composition of expenditure on hospital and community health services in Scotland—particularly the proportions accounted for by the various categories of staff costs—differs from that in England. Details of gross expenditure, broken down by service, in both cash terms and adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator, are given in the tables.

[1] provisional outturn

NHS Patients

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were treated in the Scottish Health Service in 1978-79; and how many were treated last year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1978-79 6,024,165 patients were treated and in 1988-89 6,873,112—an increase of 848,947.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition through advertisement throughout the European Community.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of contracts awarded by Scottish Office and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,500, was one in the 1988-89 financial year and three in the current financial year to date. Of these, two were awarded following advertisement in the Official Journal of the European Communities and two were considered to be exempt from advertising. One of the exempt contracts was awarded to the previous supplier and one to a new supplier.

Agricultural Colleges

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has now given consideration to the conclusions and recommendations of the report by the Williams committee into the future of the Scottish agricultural colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Following receipt of the report of the Williams committee, I have listened carefully to the views of interested persons and organisations on it, and have given consideration to the report's conclusions and recommendations.

I welcome the report, and am very grateful to Sir Alwyn Williams and his colleagues on the committee for producing such a very carefully considered document to a tight timetable.

I agree with the central recommendations of the report that the three Scottish agricultural colleges and SAC Ltd should be merged into one corporate body comprising a single national college, which would retain the functions of education, R and D and advisory services, under the management of a single board of directors and an executive director. I would at the same time confirm the Government's long-term commitment to the retention of the existing college centres across Scotland at Aberdeen, Edinburgh and Auchencruive.

I believe that detailed questions of management structure and location of facilities should be for the new board of directors to consider in the first instance, including the question of the most appropriate location for the headquarters. But I believe that the name should be the Scottish agricultural college. I also consider it important that there should be some form of local body, deriving its authority from the new board, based on each campus and responsible for maintaining links with the local community. I wish to see the role of executive director separated from that of campus principal.

I agree that the new national Scottish agricultural college should continue to occupy the middle tier of agricultural education in Scotland, but that there should be a shift in the nature of the provision towards higher education. With the exception of certain specialist courses, non-advanced further education provision should be phased out over a period of time yet to be determined. Advanced-level education should continue to be provided.

As for schools of agriculture, I am not minded to accept the Williams recommendation that these should cease to exist. While some restructuring of the relationship between the present colleges and their neighbouring universities will be an inevitable consequence of the establishment of a single national college, I attach the greatest importance to allowing the strong academic links and the productive sharing of resources established between colleges and universities to continue both now and in the long term. I would therefore in particular wish to see the concept and title "School of Agriculture" carry on at both Aberdeen and Edinburgh provided that the school was in future headed jointly by its respective campus principal and by a professor at the university. I expect the Scottish committee of the UFC to offer me advice on the balance of provision in agricultural education between the college and the universities, recognising that the universities' main strength lies in the sciences and that of the college in technological and vocational subjects.

I agree that the Government should continue to support research and development in the new college, alongside applied and near-market work funded by industry and other bodies. This support will include funding of policy-related work and some strategic research. I attach considerable importance to the new college improving the management of its research programmes through central direction.

I agree that the new college should continue to provide advisory services, and that there should be a clear statement by my Department of the work to be funded by Government. I particularly welcome the recommendation that the new college should be encouraged to expand the range of services that it can offer to facilitate rural prosperity, although it should not seek to offer a fully comprehensive service to the whole of rural society: it will be essential for other agencies and bodies to continue to provide services appropriate to their remits. I accept that the new college should offer a "gateway" service, so that through the development and maintenance of close contact with other agencies, the knowledge acquired can be used to guide farmers and other interests to the appropriate organisation for advice, grant aid and other services. Further detailed consideration of how such a service could be provided will require discussion with my Department and other interests.

I have noted the recommendations related to the veterinary investigation service. These will require further consideration and I will return to them at a later date.

I believe it is important, in the interests of the staff, students, and users of services, that my Department, the board of SAC Ltd. and the governing bodies of the three colleges should move rapidly towards early implementation of the main recommendations. I know that the present board shares my view that I should make an early announcement of a part-time chairman for the new board. I will be looking thereafter to the early appointment of the directors of the board and the executive director. Arrangements for future appointments will be discussed with the new board.

I wish to record my very considerable appreciation to the chairman of SAC Ltd., Mr. Watson Peat, the chairmen of the college governing bodies, Mr. Barbour, Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Lennox, the members of the governing bodies, the senior management of SAC Ltd. and the colleges, as well as all their staff for the way they have responded so positively to the changes initiated by Government policies over the last five years. I believe that the changes which I have announced today will provide a stable structure for improving on that record of achievement into the next century.

Homelessness

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is going to take to deal with the problem of homelessness in Scotland following the publication of Shelter's annual survey on homelessness.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has already taken action to deal with the problems of homelessness and will continue to do so.

I should point out that the Shelter survey fails to provide a reasonable basis on which to assess Government policies. The extent of homelessness alleged by the Shelter survey is greater than that indicated by the statistics published by the Scottish Development Department. These statistics, which are compiled from returns made by local authorities, record that in 1988-89 about 25,000 households applied to local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987; about 9,500 were assessed by local authorities as homeless and a further 7,500 as potentially homeless. Moreover, these figures are very similar to those for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

The Government are committted to maintaining an effective statutory framework for dealing with homelessness and will continue to ensure that local authorities and other bodies involved are properly resourced to meet the challenge of homelessness. The capital resources allocated to local authorities take full account of homelessness. I announced earlier this month an increase of £64 million in the provisional net allocations to local authorities for capital expenditure on the HRA block in 1990-91, compared with the equivalent figure for this year. In addition, the measures the Government have taken to expand the housing association movement and to revive the private rented sector will be of particular benefit to the homeless. We are continuing to provide financial assistance to organisations in the voluntary sector which are concerned with homelessness.

I am also encouraging local authorities to make use of their powers in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 to provide cash incentives to persuade tenants to move into the private sector, thus releasing housing for homeless families. Experience of such schemes in England has shown that they are a worth while and cost-effective means of helping the homeless.

The Government will continue to monitor homelessness closely and will take all necessary action to ensure that housing provision in Scotland matches housing needs more closely.

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of all part-time employees who are (a) manual and (b) non-manual earning less than (i) £4·16, (ii) £4·32, (iii) £3·12 and (iv) £2·80 per hour for (1) men, (2) women and (3) all full-time employees, excluding overtime, shift and payment-by-results premia, for Scotland and in each regional authority and borough.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Goats

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will revise the set-aside scheme so as to accommodate fibre-producing animals such as cashmere and angora goats.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the Minister for Home Affairs and the Environment in Scotland gave to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 7 November 1989, at column 488.

Training Schemes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Training Agency has referred any cases of the misappropriation of funds on employment training schemes to the police or procurator fiscal judicial.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December 1989]: No cases of misappropriation of funds have arisen to date on employment training. Where such cases occur they would be considered in accordance with Training Agency guidelines and where appropriate referred to the police. Thereafter it is for the procurator fiscal to decide whether a criminal prosecution is appropriate in any particular case.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any information about the qualifications for employment obtained by those on employment training schemes.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December 1989]: This information is not currently available, but the Training Agency has initiated a 100 per cent. follow-up survey of employment training leavers which should eventually provide information about vocational qualifications obtained by trainees.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what checks are made to ensure that the trainers on employment training schemes are properly qualified.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December 1989]: All supervisory staff of employment training providers are required to be competent to undertake such work and in addition these training providers are expected to have plans to develop and update the skills of their staff. Compliance with these requirements is examined during the ongoing programme monitoring carried out by Training Agency staff and is a prerequisite for attainment of approved training organisation status.

Lung Cancer

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the deaths of males and females in Scotland from lung cancer in every year since 1979 to the nearest available date giving the respective ages and the parliamentary constituencies they resided in.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 December 1989]: Information in the form requested—listing individual deaths—could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. I have, however, arranged to provide the number of deaths from cancer of the trachea, bronchus and lung from 1979 to 1988, classified by parliamentary constituency, age and sex. There are some 4,000 such deaths a year in Scotland, so the detailed information is lengthy and I shall therefore have it placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Disturbance Allowance

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of disturbance allowance is currently payable to members of the Armed Forces moving home.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current rates of disturbance allowance payable to members of the armed forces on moving home are as follows:

	Officers (£)	Soldiers (£)
1. Married Personnel
Higher rate[1]	1,200	900
Lower rate[2]	689	517
Special rate[3]	310	232
Child element[4]	95	95
2. Single Personnel
Higher rate[1]	900	675
Lower rate[2]	517	388
Private rented accommodation rate[5]	297	223

[1] The higher rate is payable to homeowners, who move to a new home on posting to a new duty station. Single homeowners must be aged over 30 years, except for the Navy, where the limit is aged over 25 years. There are no age restrictions for married personnel.

[2] The lower rate is payable:

(1) To married personnel—when, as a result of a posting, the family is moved to: a residence at a new duty station which is a public married quarter; their own home, which they are reoccupying; their first ever purchase of a private home; or private rented accommodation, where they previously occupied either a public married quarter or private rented accommodation at the old duty station.

(2) To single personnel—when they re-occupy their own home; on first ever occupation of their own home; or, where public accommodation is not available and they are required to move into private rented accommodation and no other accommodation allowance is paid.

[3] The special rate is payable for second or subsequent moves from accommodation, which has been occupied by the family, while remaining at the same duty station, for example, to enable major repairs or renovation of a married quarter to take place.

[4] The child element is payable in adition to disturbance allowance in respect of each child changing school as a result of a house move.

[5] The private rented rate is payable, where an individual chooses to occupy private rented accommodation for personal reasons.

Note:

Rates of disturbance allowance are currently under review with new rates due to come into effect on 1 January 1990.

EEC (Expenditure)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what each member state of the EEC spends on defence per head of its population.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to Cm. 675-I (Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988) page 39, where the information requested is given for each NATO country. My Department does not hold such information on the Republic of Ireland.

Wind Chill

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations in the United Kingdom for which the Meteorological Office can readily supply information regarding average daily temperatures allowing for a wind chill factor; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Neubert: Wind chill factors which essentially relate to humans or animals in outdoor conditions can be calculated in a number of ways. The simplest involves temperature and wind speed. Such data are received hourly by the Meteorological Office every day of the year from 97 stations in the United Kingdom.

I will write to the hon. Member listing the name and location of each of these stations.

Operational Matters (Comment)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria the Government apply when deciding whether to comment on operational matters; and if he will make a statement on the means by which parliamentary scrutiny is provided over operational matters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ministers are accountable to Parliament for all matters related to the armed forces. The extent to which it is possible to comment on the detail of operational matters will depend on security considerations.

Battle Tanks

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has commissioned a survey of hon. Members' opinions on the procurement of battle tanks to replace Chieftain tanks currently in service.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those nuclear tests since May 1979 of which he has knowledge, their location and kilotonnage and the countries that performed them.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The Government do not hold such information in an unclassified form. The details of all British nuclear tests are included in the US Department of Energy publication "Announced United States Nuclear Tests", copies of which have been placed in the House of Commons Library. Other organisations, such as the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, provide their own estimates of the numbers of nuclear tests.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Recycling

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce initiatives to encourage waste minimisation and recycling schemes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We intend to bring forward measures to encourage waste minimisation and recycling by ensuring the proper costing of waste disposal and requiring waste collection and disposal authorities to pay particular attention to recycling as part of their waste management programmes. In addition, we will continue to support projects such as the recycling city in Sheffield which are developing innovative ways of collecting and processing household recyclables.

Seals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are being taken to tighten up monitoring of killing of seals by fishermen in British waters in defiance of international protection agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom fulfills its obligations under international conventions in respect of seals by means of the current measures under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970.

Additional measures were taken in December 1988 to extend the close season for common and grey seals in England and Wales and common seals in Scotland. These measures remain in force.

In addition, we are currently considering possible ways of securing voluntary reporting about seals shot under the defensive provisions or outside the close season of the 1970 Act.

City Heliport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has been consulted with respect to the proposed development of a heliport adjacent to the Cannon Street railway bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department has been informed of the proposed development and has received a copy of the planning application submitted to the Corporation of the City of London only this week.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the noise impact upon the Palace of Westminster arising from the construction of the proposed City of London heliport.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Noise

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to update Department of Environment circular 10/73 on planning and noise and the noise insulation regulations 1975.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 13 December 1989]: We are considering the need to update Department of the Environment circular 10/73 on planning and noise as part of the review of noise legislation announced on 5 December by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The Noise Insulation Regulations 1975 are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in relation to his forthcoming campaign on community charge benefit and transitional relief, what considerations led him to conclude that it is necessary to have a publicity proposal going beyond what could be achieved by way of parliamentary announcement and ministerial speech; what is the precise goal and precise target audience of his campaign; what considerations led him to choose the balance of publicity between various media in order to achieve this goal and target; what is that balance; how much is planned to be spent on the campaign; and how the results of the campaign are to be measured, distinguishing between publicity effects and non-publicity effects.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Levels of awareness of the community charge benefit system, especially among groups most likely to include potential claimants, indicated that a wider dissemination of information was required than would have been achieved by a parliamentary announcement and speech.

The campaign will be spread between television, the press and radio, with a preponderance in the first two media, to reach the main target audiences effectively. Research is planned both before and after the campaign to measure its effectiveness and impact. The cost has to remain commercial in confidence for the time being, but we will provide costs in due course. For other parts of the question, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 December, Official Report, volume 163, column 322.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce final details of the community charge transitional relief scheme.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1989, c. 4]: I have decided, in the light of representations from the individual local authorities, that the profile of revenue support grant (RSG) payments next year should be advanced. Authorities will receive 25 per cent. of their entitlement to RSG in the first two months of the financial year. This is equivalent to an additional £400 million in April and £390 million in May compared with what they would have received if the profile of RSG grant had reflected a pattern of uniform income and expenditure throughout the year. I hope that local authorities will endeavour to issue community charge bills next April which reflect entitlement to both community charge benefit and to transitional relief. However, if authorities experience any delay in issuing community charge bills as a consequence of the community charge transitional relief scheme, these advance payments of about £800 million will be sufficient to ensure that their cash flow is not disadvantaged by the introduction of the scheme.

PSA

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a proper valuation of the Property Services Agency will be carried out; and at what cost.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 December 1989]: It is too early to say.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is to vet staff at royal palaces when the Property Services Agency is dissolved.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 December 1989]: When PSA is privatised the responsibility for any aspects of this activity in which PSA is currently involved will remain within Government.

Urban Development

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of urban development grant, urban renewal grant and city grants approval in the 57 urban programme areas and elsewhere in the United Kingdom to the end of November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 14 December 1989]: Three hundred and eighty-five urban development, urban regeneration and city grants totalling £247·2 million have been approved for projects within the 57 priority areas.

A further 21 grants totalling £6·2 million have been approved elsewhere, including projects in former priority areas.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 163

SESSION 1989–90

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
